

HITLER DECLINES VICE CHANCELLORSHIP; REITERATES DEMAND FOR FULL AUTHORITY

DRY LEAGUE HEAD FINDS NO CHOICE BETWEEN PARTIES

McBride Says Anti-Salooners Will Concentrate on Legislators and Seek To Prevent Either Modification or Repeal.

WILL TAKE FIGHT INTO ALL STATES

Finds Slight Difference in "Enforcement" Record of Candidates But None in Programs.

WINONA LAKE, Ind., Aug. 13. (P)—F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, said in a speech here tonight that both presidential candidates "in their acceptance speeches have declared an attitude toward the continuance of the eighteenth amendment which we cannot accept."

"One is for modification; the other is for repeal," he continued. "We favor neither."

"Our major task as to the coming campaign," he said, "is clearly presented in the election of congressmen, who in the last analysis have sole responsibility for amending the constitution."

"We will support those candidates who stand definitely committed to opposition to either repeal or modification."

"We will fight both repeal and modification in the next congress, and if, by any chance, the dries are defeated in congress, which is the first line of maintenance, we will fight on in the states and in congress at every turn of the way until the lingering, lawless liquor traffic surrenders to the law and constitution."

McBride said "No program proposed can safeguard against the return of the saloon."

"If liquor comes back, the saloon will be back," he added.

Of the democratic and republican prohibition planks, he said: "While one is better than the other, neither is satisfactory."

"In the records of the candidates, as embodied in service rendered and attitudes expressed," he said, "it is also clearly seen that there is a difference; the difference is chiefly with reference to the enforcement of the law."

W. C. T. U. WILL FIGHT FOR DRY CANDIDATES

SEATTLE, Aug. 13.—(P)—A criticism of President Hoover's recommendation that the states deal individually with prohibition, made by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, was telegraphed to the chief executive today by the national convention of the organization here.

The delegates adopted a report by the executive committee suggesting such action. Mrs. Boole's statement said "the proposed plan will be opposed by the dry forces every step of the way."

Lieutenant Governor John A. Gellatly told the union that "the fact that you are founded upon the right principles insures your ultimate victory."

Illinois Man Named Home Loan Secretary

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—(P)—William E. Murray, of Rock Falls, Ill., today was named secretary of the Federal Home Loan Bank board, and A. R. Gardner, of Olympia, Washington, was chosen administrative assistant.

Franklin W. Fort, chairman of the board, announced appointments. Murray has been an assistant to Secretary Hyde and acting executive secretary of the Agriculture Credit Association division of the agriculture department.

Gardner is now with the Reconstruction Corporation in charge of application from building and loan associations.

LANCASTER FOES SCORE TESTIMONY OF CRIMINOLOGIST

State's Witnesses Attack Reputation of Man Who Declared Clarke's Death Was Suicide.

MIAMI, Fla., Aug. 13.—(P)—Testimony that Albert H. Hamilton, Auburn (N. Y.) criminologist, was of bad reputation and that he was not to be believed on oath, today marked a sharply sketched tangent from the main issue in the trial of Captain W. N. Lancaster for the slaying of Hamilton Clarke, young author, in culmination of a love triangle that had Mrs. J. M. Keith-Miller as its third figure.

In a secondary highlight, Captain Lancaster took the stand and denied he had told Mrs. J. M. Keith-Miller, mother of the dead man, shortly after his death that he was a criminal.

"I am so confused that sometimes I don't know what I am saying," he said.

"I did not," Lancaster shouted, leaning forward in his chair. "I have never told her any such thing."

"Attention by the jury," said the testimony of Hamilton held the New York criminologist on the stand through much of the day and eventually brought the attention of another witness that he would not believe Hamilton.

Called a Suicide.

Hamilton, a defense witness, testified yesterday that his examination of the evidence in the case "absolutely convinced" that Clarke was a suicide and that "there is not a scintilla of evidence" on Clarke's skill, produced in court, or on the death pistol, to show that he was murdered.

A. Peterson, Dade county investigation officer, gave the testimony regarding Hamilton's reputation.

"Do you know of Mr. Hamilton's work as a criminologist?" State Attorney N. Vernon Hawthorne asked.

"I am familiar with it," the witness answered.

Defense Counsel James M. Carson objected strenuously, on the ground that only persons living in the same area were qualified to testify to reputation of others. He was overruled.

His objection to the removal of Hamilton from the courtroom during Peterson's testimony had been sustained.

"Yes, I know his reputation," Peterson answered.

"Is it good or bad?" Hawthorne asked.

Carson's objection was overruled.

"Bad," Peterson answered.

"In view of your last statement, would you believe him on oath?" Carson again was overruled.

"I would not," Peterson answered.

Hawthorne spent much of the day questioning Hamilton about his employment in the Sacco-Vanzetti case in Boston.

He frequently gave sharp retorts as the state attorney had read into the record a long court report on charges that Hamilton acted unethically in the Boston case.

Hamilton sat quietly at the defense table with Carson and the defendant during the state's attempt to impeach his testimony by other witnesses.

He frequently gave sharp retorts as the state attorney had read into the record a long court report on charges that Hamilton acted unethically in the Boston case.

Defense Moved Blocked.

The state blocked attempts of the defense to have four Miami physicians express their opinions as to whether the Sacco-Vanzetti case.

The physicians were Doctors M. H. Tallman, Donald F. Gove, Walter C. Jones Jr. and Joseph S. Stewart Jr. They performed an autopsy on Clarke's exhumed body several weeks after his death.

The action of the physicians resulted in the presentation in the

GARNER WILL VISIT ROOSEVELT TODAY TO DISCUSS PLANS

Governor Prepares To Begin Campaigning in G. O. P. States of Ohio, New Jersey, Conn.

BY WALTER T. BROWN.

HYDE PARK, N. Y., Aug. 13.—(P)—Governor Roosevelt, spending the last weekend at his Hudson river home before entering upon a two-month invasion of republican territory, tomorrow will entertain his running mate, Speaker John N. Garner, of Texas.

When he motors back to Albany tomorrow night, the presidential nominee will turn his back on the pleasant country home and its Sylvan setting, until the middle of October.

The next three week-ends, Mr. Roosevelt will be in three states that generally are republican in national elections, Ohio, New Jersey and Connecticut. The Associated Press has learned that the "big swing" of the Roosevelt campaign, that will take the candidate to the Pacific coast, will start on September 12. It will end on October 2 at Buffalo, where it is understood the New York democrats will hold their state convention. The following week-end, Mr. Roosevelt will be in Tennessee and Kentucky.

The governor pushed the Walker hearing out of the way this week-end. Tomorrow night he will return to his home in Albany with his counsel, Martin Conboy, and go over the program for resumption of the case on Monday.

While there still are two charges in the Seabury summation to be considered—those involving Russell T. Sherwood, missing accountant, and Mayor Walker's brother, Dr. William Walker—also charges by James E. Finegan and William J. Schiefel, it generally is believed that Mr. Roosevelt will end the hearing next week.

Despite the menace of court procedure, Attorney-General John J. Bennett has assured Mr. Roosevelt that a writ of prohibition cannot halt the hearing.

Ruth Chatterton Is Wedded To George Brent, Film Actor

HARRISON, N. Y., Aug. 13.—(P)—Within 24 hours after being divorced from Ralph Forbes, Ruth Chatterton, actress, was married today to George Brent, motion picture actor.

William Wilding, town clerk, in whose office the ceremony took place, said they were "the finest couple I ever saw come in here."

Miss Chatterton gave her age as 34, her home as Beverly Hills, Cal., and said she was born in New York. Brent gave his age as 28, his birthplace as Ireland and his address as Hollywood. He also has been divorced.

Justice of the Peace Winifred C. Allen officiated at the ceremony. Frances Starr, actress, and Virginia Hammond were the witnesses.

Miss Chatterton returned from abroad earlier in the week with the statement that she had been out of reach of newspapers and was not sure whether she had been divorced.

Last night in New York she said Forbes, who is an actor, had notified her he had been granted a divorce on grounds of mental cruelty and "divergence of tastes."

EX-HUSBAND FORBES WISHES HER HAPPINESS

RENO, Nev., Aug. 13.—(P)—Informed that his former wife, Ruth Chatterton, had been married to George Brent, New York, actor, today he wished them "every happiness."

Forbes expects to leave Reno tomorrow for Los Angeles and Hollywood. He indicated he does not intend to remarry.

HURRICANE'S LASH ENDANGERS CITIES ON COAST OF TEXAS

Gulf Waters Sweep High on Galveston Island, But All Residents Are Reported Safe.

HOUSTON, Texas, Aug. 13.—(P)—High winds, presumably from the skirts of a tropical gale blowing in from the southwest, struck Houston and Galveston tonight. Early checks indicated no one had been injured.

At Morgan's Point, where the Houston ship channel enters Galveston bay, the wind was reported blowing at a velocity of 65 miles per hour, and water was standing even with the pier, which normally is four feet above the water line.

An interurban dispatcher here said he had been informed the causeway connecting Galveston island with the mainland was under water early tonight when the last load of men, women and children leaving the island had crossed.

"There is no possible way out of Galveston now," he said.

Telegraph communication went "out" from Galveston, but the Galveston News in a long distance telephone call at 9:30 p. m. said it was believed there was no way out of the island.

"Some trees had been blown down and power was off. A sea wall protects the city."

Tonight's storm—its extent had not been determined—recalled those towns, reviving an earlier forecast that it might strike about Galveston, where more than 5,000 persons lost their lives in a tidal wave in 1900.

45 Miles An Hour.

The Houston Chronicle's correspondent in Freeport, said he "could not believe" the velocity was "more than 45 miles."

"Even," he added, "though my house is rocking a bit."

He had heard no reports of casualties there.

Record Hop Halted By Breakfast Bucket

VALLEY STREAM, Aug. 13.—(P)—The old breakfast bucket that swung in the sky brought an end to a record hop for women. They got through the first night all right and completed their first refueling operation successfully this morning.

But then the refueling ship let down a bucketful of breakfast and the bucket struck one wing of their plane, ripping the fabric. The girls landed for repairs.

WALKER DECISION WILL BE RENDERED DESPITE LITIGATION

Five Days More, at Least, of Testimony; Moral, Not Legal, Grounds Believed Weightier Factor.

BY WALTER TRUMBULL.

(Copyright, 1932, by The North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—(NANA)—It seems evident that Governor Roosevelt is regarding Mayor Walker's actions rather from an abstract moral ground than from the standpoint of any one questionable act. His view apparently is that a man in public office has strict obligations not to put himself in a questionable position. It would not be surprising if the governor made his decision from this angle.

HYDE PARK, N. Y., Aug. 13.—(UP)—The trial of Mayor James J. Walker will last another four or five days at least, according to Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt disclosed tonight the governor may call his own witnesses to substantiate some of the testimony against the mayor by Judge Seabury.

Roosevelt, it was pointed out, has yet to hear Walker elaborate on several phases of his testimony before the Hofstadter committee. In addition to that, it was said that he planned to go thoroughly into the specific charges filed against Walker by James E. Finegan, New York, who describes himself as "a democrat and a taxpayer."

It also was learned that an early decision will be handed down in the case by Roosevelt despite any court action designed to test his constitutional powers in conducting the ouster hearing.

Friends of the governor said he was not concerned in the least with the movement for a ruling on his powers, feeling that they were clearly defined in the statutes and admitted of no question.

Sidney Levine, a New York attorney, has raised the issue of Roosevelt's authority to decide on the charges. He has obtained an order returnable before the supreme court in Albany August 19 at which time Roosevelt is scheduled to show cause why a writ should not be granted, restraining him from exercising his executive prerogatives in the matter.

Until their scope has been determined by the state's highest tribunal, if necessary.

Roosevelt believes, it was declared, that he is acting in exercise of a not a judicial capacity, and that he is not answerable to such a writ.

The governor, however, will have Attorney-General John J. Bennett appear in court August 19, not to contest the order obtained by Levine, but merely as a representative in a friendly action, at which time his position will be "explained."

In the event Levine loses, legal experts were of the opinion he could not appeal.

Who the witnesses might be that Roosevelt may summon to corroborate the material submitted as grounds for Walker's removal, could not be learned. Finegan also is expected to bring witnesses, but it is within the governor's power to limit the number.

H. NELSON GAY, 62, DIES IN MONACO

Famous American Author Succumbs to Attack of Double Pneumonia.

MONTE CARLO, Monaco, Aug. 13. (AP)—H. Nelson Gay, American author, died today in the Monaco hotel of double pneumonia, which set in after an operation for an internal complaint. He was 62 years old.

His wife and a brother-in-law, William D. Guthrie, of New York, were at the bedside.

Mr. Gay, who was born at Newton, Mass., had lived much abroad after his education at Amherst and Harvard. In 1896 he was married in London to Euvonia Guthrie, of New York. Most of his books were on matters connected with Italian history. He was said to possess the best library in existence on the history of Italy between 1819 and 1870. The Italian government conferred several decorations upon him.

DEATH OF GAY CAUSES DEEP REGRET IN ROME

ROME, Italy, Aug. 13.—(AP)—The death of H. Nelson Gay, American author, at Monte Carlo today caused expressions of the deepest regret in Rome, where he was a leader in the American colony for a quarter of a century and unofficial adviser to many American ambassadors.

He was noted among the Italian historians, many of whom used his library on Italian unification, which was acknowledged to be the best in Italy.

GEORGE CROMWELL

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., Aug. 13. (AP)—George Cromwell, 92, native of New York, and member of the 12th regiment, New York infantry, who saw service during the entire period of the War Between the States, died here today. He leaves a son, Robert. Funeral will be held Monday afternoon with the local G. A. R. post in charge.

MISS LAURA H. YOUNG

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 13.—(UP)—Miss Laura H. Young, general secretary to the Young Women's Christian Association here, died today. She was born in rural Cove, N. Y., and will be buried at Johnston, N. Y., where she formerly was secretary of the east central field of the national staff.

HENRY ANSLLEY

AMARILLO, Texas, Aug. 13.—(UP)—Henry Ansley, 38, for 11 years a member of the staff of The Amarillo News-Globe and author of the booklet, "I Like the Depression," died here today of injuries sustained in an automobile accident.

BILLY BARRETT, RAU CAPTURE 3D PLACE IN BRIDGE TOURNAMENT

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 13. (AP)—Theodore A. Lightner and Michael T. Gottlieb, of New York, today won the national masters' contract pair championship and with it the $3,000 Waldemar Von Zedtwitz gold cup for one year. Playing in the third session of this event, they made 178 1-2 match points on 28 boards, for a total of 543 points.

David Burnstone and Howard Schenken, of New York, erstwhile members of the "Four Horsemen," amassed 195 1-2 points for the session's top score, but it was not enough to overcome the leader's margin. Their total was 532 3-4.

Two youngsters whose playing has been one of the high spots of the fourth annual summer tournament of the American Bridge Club, William K. Barrett, of Augusta, Ga., and John Rau, of New York, were third, with a total of 517 1-4 points. P. H. Sims, of Deal, N. J., and Baron Waldemar Von Zedtwitz, donor of the trophy, followed with 513 3-4 and Lee Langdon and John Matthews, both of New York, were fifth, with 504.

E. B. DOYAL TO SPEAK FOR J. OSCAR WALL

E. B. Doyal, mayor of Warm Springs, Ga., and superintendent of the Roosevelt farms, will speak in the interest of J. Oscar Wall's candidacy for commissioner of agriculture at the noon recess of Meriwether superior court at Greenville, Ga., Monday.

Mr. Doyal is widely known throughout the state, and was chosen by Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt for the responsible position of superintendent of his farms because of his progress-catapults and campers had left, a locomotive was standing by to take others out of the danger zone should developments warrant, and all water craft was being moved up into the Brazos river as far as possible.

Concern was centered, in some measure, upon the camp of the 35th division, Texas national guard, at Palacios, where 7,000 officers and men were encamped in their annual training period. Palacios is roughly mid-way between Seadrift and Freeport.

More than 100 families moved out of summer colonies at Caplen and Gilchrist. At other low-lying points along the coast, similar precautions were taken. Coast guards rescued occupants of four automobiles stranded by a high tide near San Luis Pass.

Several families were evacuated from homes in flats just below Quintana, at the mouth of the Brazos river, when an abnormal tide overflowed that section. Waters of the Gulf were rough and northwest winds were increasing the disturbance.

Crews of men were busy at Port Arthur aiding firemen in filling sandbags for use in an emergency to fill gaps in the new seawall.

HITLER'S TROOPS IN READINESS say they are ready—ready for anything.

The most rigorous discipline is maintained. The troops are billeted in barracks that are reminiscent of the war days of 1918, and their undergarments are abroad in Berlin, ever active, ever engaged in the drive which they hope will put their leader into power.

In the course of his tour, I visited the cadet school where German youth are being trained for military leadership, and the activity there was electric. The young soldiers are billeted in barn lofts, just as in the war days and they are under the most severe training program.

From all outward appearances, the storm troops, if armed, would make a formidable fighting force.

There is grave danger that civil disturbances will arise at any moment. The brown shirts' readiness for action—whatever it may be—simply indicated by the hustle and bustle of the troops, dashing around by motorcycle and automobile, constantly on the push.

HOOVER WILL ACCEPT STATUE OF GIBBONS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—(UP)—President Hoover tomorrow will accept on behalf of the United States government a statue of the late James Cardinal Gibbons, which will be unveiled by delegates to the golden anniversary supreme convention of the Knights of Columbus.

The statue will be presented to the government by Morton H. Carmody, supreme knight.

INDIAN SPRINGS, Ga., Aug. 13. This historic little community, scene of bloody deeds in Georgia's Indian wars and later the annual site of fervid religious meetings, seethed with curious and interested spectators from all over the state today, following the discovery yesterday of what may be the mummies of a prehistoric mother and her baby.

In a perfect—almost too perfect, scientists claim—state of semi-petrified preservation, the bodies of the woman and child were arranged in an improvised exhibit case and their owner, L. J. Gregory, on whose property the discovery yesterday was made, was doing a land-office business at his little show, where visitors to the springs were admitted at 10 cents a head to see the curiosities.

Approximately 400 out-of-town visitors swarmed to the springs today, and although experts who viewed the mummies were inclined to be skeptical of their genuineness, the consensus of those among the laity who observed them was that they were the "real thing."

Gregory announced plans for continued excavations in the vicinity where the bodies were found Friday. Many residents believe that the spot may be a burial ground of antique times, and some suggest that the two relics dug up Friday may be remnants of either the Toltec or Aztec races.

DOUBT OF GEOLOGIST

EVOKED BY MUMMIES

Opinion of Dr. Leon P. Smith, professor of chemistry and geology at Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga., that the mother and child mummies unearthed Friday at Indian Springs are not genuine cases of petrification was supported Saturday by Dr. S. W. McCallie, the state geologist, who said that he does not believe that petrification would have been possible in the red clay at Indian Springs.

"Only bones and shell petrify, and flesh disintegrates too rapidly to be preserved by this means," Dr. McCallie said. "Hair lasts much longer than flesh, and certain conditions, may last 20 to 30 years buried in the earth." Dr. McCallie, who had not seen the mummies, said that Dr.

nazi chief that his conscience would not permit him to entrust to one party the sole responsibility for the entire German people. He entreated Hitler to be content with a cabinet post.

Hitler told him that nothing but the chancellorship would satisfy him and that he would not share the government responsibility with others.

Then he clicked his heels, saluted and left.

The chancellor and his cabinet associates went into conference to consider their course.

Their first reaction, it was said, was to believe the new reichstag when it assembled at the end of the month and dare the opposition to turn them out. If there should be a vote of no-confidence the next step would be to dissolve the reichstag and to go on as at present, governing without parliament until things settle down.

It was understood that Hitler had renewed his assurance that no illegal attempt would be made by his party to seize the governing power.

The government early this evening announced its determination to continue in office and go before the new reichstag.

The cabinet would take its time to deliberate and reflect on what would happen in event that a motion of no-confidence prevailed. It was anticipated that the cabinet would be rushed into premature speculations now. No session of the cabinet has thus far been scheduled.

Hitler departed for Munich early tonight, saying that a national meeting of his party's leaders was scheduled for August 16, when they would decide upon measures for continuing the fight.

He declared the official version of what took place during his parleys with Chancellor Von Papen and President Von Hindenburg contained "in some points not unessential truths."

The national socialist press bureau later issued the following version:

"Hitler, upon being asked whether he and his party were willing to enter the Von Papen government, replied:

"We are willing and determined to assume full responsibility for German policy in every respect. If exclusive conduct of the government is entrusted to us. If not, the national socialist movement can participate neither in the power nor the responsibility. Especially, participation in the Von Papen government is for us out of the question."

"As President Von Hindenburg, however, declined to entrust the conduct of the government to the national socialist movement as the strongest party, the negotiations were broken off without result."

President Von Hindenburg gave evidence of his unconcern over possible disturbance by leaving on an evening train for Neudeck.

As the chancellor bade him goodbye, the president assured Von Papen that he could rely on his support in quickly accomplishing the momentous tasks, especially for relieving unemployment which the government must push urgently now that the political situation was clarified.

HOOVER WILL FISH IN CHESAPEAKE BAY

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—(AP)—President Hoover decided late today to take a two or three-day fishing trip at the mouth of Chesapeake bay. He will leave the capital tomorrow on a department of commerce inspection boat.

Presidential aides said the president would take with him three or four guests. It was said he would confine his trip completely to "fishing, rest and relaxation." The boat is equipped with radio.

It was explained the president desired to cut himself off as completely as possible from his customary routine, however, and even his usual secret service guard probably will be quartered on another boat.

SECRECY SHROUDS MERRILL MYSTERY

Probers Silent on Course Being Pursued in Murder of Recluse.

NATCHEZ, Miss., Aug. 13.—(AP)—County authorities today pressed their investigation of the slaying of aristocratic Jane Surget Merrill, but maintained an official silence as to what clues were being followed.

There were indications that Maurice O'Neil, chief of the identification bureau of New Orleans, J. C. Chancellor, Jackson fingerprint expert, Sheriff C. P. Roberts and Chief of Police M. P. Ryan were concentrating their study on new bloody fingerprints found near the scene of the crime, on the railing of a white bridge.

As officers labored to strengthen the web of evidence linking the slaying to R. H. "Wild Man" Dana, and his housekeeper and guardian, Miss Octavia Dockery, sympathy for the two was expressed publicly. Indignation was expressed that unauthorized persons had been permitted to enter Glenwood, the home of Dana and Miss Dockery, and examine relics of a happier day.

In addition to E. H. Ratcliff and L. P. Roberts, counsel for Dana and Miss Dockery, Mrs. Sophie Friedman, prominent woman attorney of Memphis, has come to Natchez to volunteer her services for the defense.

MRS. CHARLES MYERS DIES AT HOSPITAL

Mrs. Charles E. Myers, 82, mother of Mrs. Newton C. Wing, widely known Atlantian, died suddenly Saturday afternoon at the Georgia Baptist hospital. Mrs. Myers, while on her way from New Orleans to Washington, D. C., fell and broke her hip a month ago. She was thought to be on the road to recovery when she suffered a relapse Saturday afternoon.

Her daughter, Mrs. Wing, was one of the founders of the Better Films Committee and was formerly its chairman before moving to New Orleans several years ago. She was extremely active in all civic work here and during her mother's illness, had been residing at 1309 North avenue, N. E.

Mrs. Myers and Mrs. Wing were moving to Washington and were visiting here when Mrs. Myers fell. Mrs. Myers also survived by a grandson, Roger Wing, of Washington. Harry G. Poole will announce funeral arrangements.

It was reported, Duncan G. Minor, life-long friend of Miss Merrill and administrator of her large estate, had engaged private detectives. He has frequently expressed the opinion Dana and Miss Dockery were innocent and tonight he accused negroes of the slaying. He said he believed a "gang" was involved in the case.

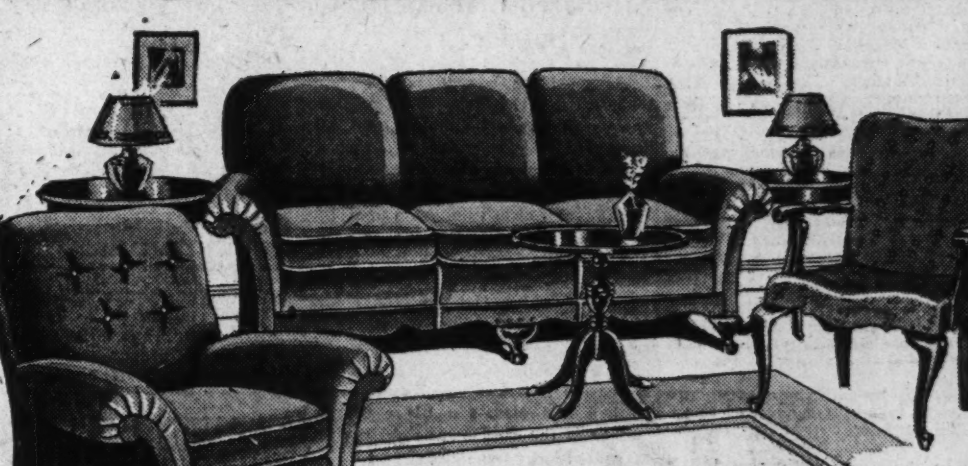

It was learned Miss Merrill was a spiritualist and had conducted seances in her home almost nightly, but she never allowed anyone to be present. The secret seances were believed responsible for negro "hate" tales which had grown up about Glenburny, the old Merrill estate where Miss Merrill and lived alone for 40 years.

Carolina Business Activity Points Way to Better Times

Industrial and Agricultural Life of State Takes on Brighter Aspect as Strikes End.

This is the first of a series of dispatches indicating the trend in industry throughout the south. A second will be published in an early issue.

(Copyright, 1932, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 13.—With the dramatic settlement of the High Point textile strike, resulting in upward of 15,000 workers returning to regular employment, the completion of plans for putting 7,500 jobless men to work on highway construction beginning this month, and the approaching season of tobacco harvesting and marketing which will require the services of thousands of persons, there is a pronounced feeling here that business conditions in North Carolina are headed for higher levels.

The highway projects, to be financed with $6,000,000 of federal funds, will get under way shortly after August 16, when the first letting will be held here. The initial projects are expected to provide work for 1,500 men, and other lettings will follow.

Encouraging news from the textile industry is not confined to the High Point area. In Raleigh, the Pilot mills are booked up for night and day operation, the huge Enka rayon mills near Asheville are speeding up production, and from Statesville come reports that the mills there in which Governor Gardner is interested have recalled workers on substantial orders from northern markets.

The Anderson (S. C.) cotton mills will resume Monday after a ten-week shutdown, and the LaFrance company plans to add 400 employees. The Ware Shoals, S. C. Manufacturing Company has added a night shift. The Southern Silk Mills at Greensboro, N. C., have increased wages 10 to 12 per cent, due to increased orders. At Hickory, N. C., the Conover Mill glove plant will go on a full-time basis. Mills of the Chatham Manufacturing Company at Winston-Salem and Elkin are starting full-time operations. The Whitney mills at Spartanburg will start Monday, employing 250. The Warlick Manufacturing Company's rayon plant will start on full-time operations Monday. The Paolet mills at Spartanburg will give employment to 1,000 when they start on Monday.

Solid basis for recovery is seen in the improved banking tone throughout the state. Not only has no bank failed since early in May, but two large banks, the United Bank & Trust Company of Greensboro, with four branches, and the Savings & Trust Bank of Wilson have reopened since July 1, and a number of smaller banks have resumed business during the year.

The real estate market continues dormant, but distress property overhanging the market is being assimilated gradually.

A boom in mining is under way with old gold diggings in Randolph and other good counties being worked to meet the demand for the yellow metal, while the state continues to lead in production of mica and talc and deposits of refractory minerals and tin are being developed.

The peach crop is bringing better prices, and growers of tobacco, which has supplanted cotton as this state's major crop, are confidently looking forward to better prices and employment for many workers now idle.

Adding to the encouraging outlook is the action of governing authorities all over the state in sharply trimming budgets and in some sections actually reducing taxes.

Retail trade shows some signs of revival but merchants, after taking heavy inventory losses in summer sales, are moving cautiously on restocking. Farming commodity markets have served to accelerate trade buying to some extent.

Opening of school will throw more money in circulation. Under the new public education system here, the state bears entire cost of the constitutional six-month term and the $16,000,000 appropriation is safeguarded against reduction by legislative enactment.

While the outlook is for improved conditions, competent observers are of the opinion that the process will be slow. Much depends, of course, on the prices of tobacco and cotton this fall.

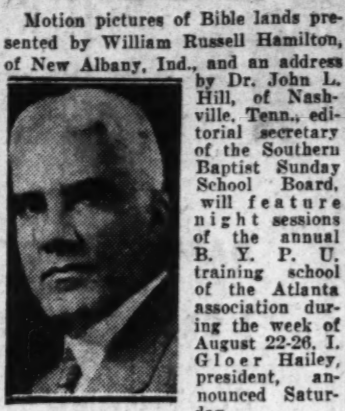

CHANGE IN STATUS OF VETERANS ASKED BY MEDICAL GROUP

Restriction of free hospitalization and free medical care to those veterans having service-connected disabilities and those unable to pay for medical and hospital services is favored by the Medical Association of Georgia in its newly adopted legislative program, it was announced Saturday by the committee on public policy and legislation, of which Dr. Dan Y. Sage is chairman.

Registration of automobile drivers and compulsory liability insurance, protection of hospitals in collection of their bills, inspection of all hospitals by a division of the state board of health, and enactment of a sterilization law for the feeble-minded and insane also are favored by the association, it was said.

An amendment to the reorganization act so as to place the department of public health under management and control of a board of health, thus taking the health branch of the government out of politics, is advocated in the program. Members of the committee include Dr. A. R. Rozar, of Macon; Dr. Grady N. Coker, of Canton; Dr. Marvin M. Head, of Zebulon, president; Dr. Charles H. Richardson, of Macon, president-elect; and Dr. Allen H. Bunce, of Atlanta, secretary-treasurer.

ADDRESS BY HILL, FILMS TO FEATURE B. Y. P. U. MEETING

Motion pictures of Bible lands presented by William Russell Hamilton, of New Albany, Ind., and an address by Dr. John L. Hill, of Nashville, Tenn., editorial secretary of the Southern Baptist Sunday School Board, will feature night sessions of the annual B. Y. P. U. training school of the Atlanta association during the week of August 22-26. I. Glover Haskiey, president, announced Saturday.

Dr. Hill will speak Thursday night, August 25, and the motion pictures will be shown on other nights of the week. Day sessions will be held for juniors at the Second Baptist church and night sessions for intermediates, seniors and adults will be held at the First Baptist church. An outstanding faculty composed of leaders and speakers from Atlanta and from over the south has been selected, it was said.

BRIEF ILLNESS FATAL TO DR. STRICKLAND

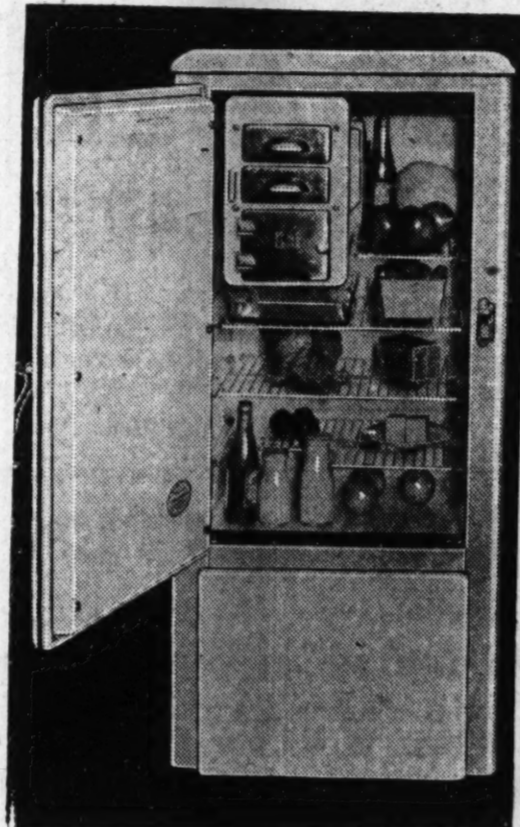

Dr. N. Strickland, widely known physician of Dunwoody, died Saturday at an Atlanta hospital after a short illness. He was 50 years of age, and a leader in his community. The funeral will be held at 2 o'clock this afternoon at Sandy Springs Methodist church, of which he was a member of the board of stewards. The Rev. B. F. Mize and the Rev. W. F. Burdett will officiate, and interment will be in Edison cemetery.

A leader in Masonic circles, Dr. Strickland was a member of Chamblee lodge No. 444, F & A. M., and also of the Roswell lodge. He was a member of the Chamblee lodge of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and was active in church work.

Surviving are his wife, two daughters, Miss Celia and Miss Virginia Strickland; two sons, Glenn and Edwin Strickland; his mother, Mrs. W. A. Strickland, of Decatur; three sisters and three brothers, including D. F. and Buck Strickland, of Atlanta; H. M. Patterson & Son in charge of arrangements.

SEWER PLAN PLEA TO GO TO COUNCILS

Heads of Boroughs To Receive Request Tuesday Night.

Mayor James L. Key, Clarke Donaldson, chief of construction; William A. Hansell, assistant chief of construction in charge of sewers, and other Atlanta officials, Tuesday night will present the formal request of Atlanta for a united front in the drive for $10,000,000 for modernization of the sewer system of the metropolitan district to a joint meeting of the councils of East Point, College Park and Hapeville.

The session will be held at the city hall at East Point, and Atlanta will back the formal presentation of the matter with estimates showing the financial responsibility the various governments would assume. The original Monday night meeting was postponed to Tuesday night.

Every one of the political subdivisions in the affected area has already backed the move for the $10,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with the exception of the three municipalities. Key and officials of the government wish to forward the petition for the fund with which to prosecute the projected sewer improvements with the backing of all affected governments.

MINE PICKETS DEFY UNION HEAD'S ORDERS

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 13.—(AP)—No coal was hoisted today in mines of the Springfield subdistrict.

Pickets still surrounded the tipplers in defiance of International President John L. Lewis' orders for cessation of picketing and mass meetings.

In nearby Taylorville, 1,500 diggers went below in four mines of the Peabody Coal Company. The Taylorville subdistrict had voted for ratification of the scale.

A mass meeting was called this afternoon and all locals opposed to work under the $5 contract were invited to send representatives.

Famed Oglethorpe Portrait Is Bought for University

This painting of General James Edward Oglethorpe was recently discovered in London and was purchased for the art collection of Oglethorpe University by Dr. Thornwell Jacobs, president of the university. British art experts say it is the only contemporary portrait of the famous soldier who founded the colony of Georgia in 1733, in existence. Associated Press photo.

BY KENNETH W. MAYO.
Associated Press Staff Correspondent.
Beneath the dust of generations has been found what experts declare is the only contemporary oil portrait in existence of General James Edward Oglethorpe, founder of the colony of Georgia.

The canvas appeared in London and has been purchased for Oglethorpe University, of Atlanta, by Dr. Thornwell Jacobs, president.

The university head was advised by friends in England that an unusually fine portrait of the founder of Georgia had appeared on the market for $5,000.

Dr. Jacobs hastened to England and made a thorough investigation of the authenticity of the picture. Officials of the British museum, the National Portrait Gallery and a number of private experts pronounced the work a genuine contemporary portrait of Oglethorpe, although they were unable to name it the handiwork of any specific artist.

The painting was discovered while it was being removed for its owner. Dr. Jacobs' friend noticed its similarity to Burford's celebrated mezzotint which was the basis of the likeness of Oglethorpe appearing in many history textbooks and encyclopedias.

The friend, whose identity Dr. Jacobs has not disclosed, asked the owner to tell him the history of the portrait.

"It is a painting of General Oglethorpe," the owner replied. "It came into my possession by private bequest on the death of an elderly maiden lady, my first cousin once removed, at the age of 81. I have always heard it referred to in the family as a portrait of Oglethorpe."

"The family story of the acquisition of the picture was related to me by an uncle some years ago. I know that this portrait was left to my cousin by her mother, who died at the age of 98, but I am afraid I never paid much attention to the portrait as I never expected to come into possession of it, and as a matter of fact should never have done so but for the deaths of other members of the family."

According to tradition, related to Dr. Jacobs when he purchased the painting, the canvass was finished during the bachelor days of the general, who was not married until he was 55 years of age. It was presented to a very beautiful young girl, a member of the owner's family, and was treasured by her all of her life. At her death it passed to other members of the family and eventually came into possession of the man from whom Dr. Jacobs obtained it.

The only other known drawings or portraits of General Oglethorpe are: Group of Fleet street prison committee, 1729, National Portrait Gallery, London; mezzotint by T. Burford, author unknown, original lost; group of Georgia council, by Verelst, owned by Earl of Shaftesbury; portrait by Sir Joshua Reynolds, burned in a fire at Belvoir; drawing by Samuel Ireland of Oglethorpe at the age of 102.

General Oglethorpe was born in 1696 at Westminster, England, of a landed family. He served in parliament for a number of years, and becoming interested in prisoners and their welfare, determined to lead a group of them to America where they could begin life anew.

He obtained a charter from the crown in 1732 and spent several months choosing debtor prisoners for his colony. On November 17, 1732, the good ship Anne, equipped for the voyage at Oglethorpe's expense, set sail with 35 families aboard containing 130 persons.

The men included carpenters, bricklayers, farmers and mechanics. In due time the ship landed at Charleston, S. C., and after exploration of the coast line, Oglethorpe picked a site at Yamacraw Bluff, near what is now Savannah, and in February, 1733, founded the colony of Georgia.

GOVERNOR SPEAKS AT DOUGLASVILLE

Charges Crisp "Neglecting" Duties; Defends Own Record.

DOUGLASVILLE, Ga., Aug. 13. Governor Richard B. Russell Jr. spoke here at 11 o'clock this morning, in the interest of his candidacy for the United States senate. He took Mr. Crisp severely to task in charging him with neglecting his official duties. "I believe the people of Georgia know who has been governor during my term of office," Governor Russell said. "I have not been led around with a ring in my nose by the old political gang and none of them has sat beside the governor's chair and "I believe Georgians who have kept up with public affairs know that I have been a fairly good chief executive, with a few exceptions, in the state legislature. The people of this state should have a deep and profound respect for the services of their representatives of the last general assembly, because without their support I could have done nothing.

"I am sure that I am deserting my job, either because I will serve every day of the term to which I was

"I see Mr. Crisp says that if he were elected to the senate, he would pursue the same course that he has followed the last 20 years. That is just what I am afraid to do. That is why I am in this race originally."

him. He has served the vested interests very well, but has turned his back on the farmers and the people here. I don't think there is a single point to one single thing he ever has done to benefit the average man.

"When I get to Washington I will not only represent the people of my power to gain the plaudits of the money and jute trusts and then come back to Georgia and talk out of the other corner of the money bag, but I will talk to the vote voters of the state.

"I will talk and vote in Washington on the basis of the welfare of the people. I will talk when I am in Georgia. Mr. Crisp has been on both sides and in the middle of every issue in this campaign. I am not going to do that. I am expecting him to make a leathern confession on that many a day now."

Senator Alpha Fowler presided at the meeting held in the Charging Congressman Robert Ramspeck with lack of statesmanship, courage and leadership, Channing H. Hutcherson, of the Tallapoosa district, introduced Hays' resolution. Governor Russell left for Villa Rica and Carrollton, where he was to speak during the afternoon.

Following is the text of the statement he issued Saturday:

"Our congressman had the finest opportunity ever presented to save the people from the great plague of unemployment, the government-owned industrial costs from racketeers. All that was required was a little courage and a modicum of leadership.

"The repeal of the Voistead act would have started the wheels of commerce and industry turning, provided specific for the railroad jobs for the unemployed, customers for the merchant, huge revenues for the government. It would have meant the end of the depression.

"To every suggestion of this kind I have said 'No'.

"Instead of a plain bill of states manipulation such as this, the congress proceeded to pass one of the most iniquitous tax measures ever foisted upon a people, and then because of its refusal to repeal the Volstead act, congress was obliged to pass a gigantic relief bill.

"Had I been in congress at the moment, I would have worked as consistently and effectively as I could now for the immediate repeal of the Volstead act and the 18th amendment."

STONE ADVOCATES
PHONE AND POWER RATE REDUCTION

Reduction of rates on electric power, electric lights, telephones and gas service is advocated by Guy O. Stone, of Newburgh, N. Y., who has been successful in securing a bill for the purpose introduced in congress for a place on the calendar.

the state public service commission, who passed through Atlanta Saturday on his way to northeast Georgia.

The biggest question on the minds of the races in the primary is the question of whether or not they are going to get reduction in electric, telephone and gas rates," Mr. Stone said.

He took me down to visit I met groups of people who insist that the time has come when these rates must be lowered. In keeping with reduced salaries and reduced living costs, the electric companies, telephone companies and gas companies have really reduced their operating expenses through the discharge of many employees. They have had enormous sums for years and years. They seem to continue to charge the same rates they charged during the days

"In my campaign," also favor the elimination of the so-called "service ad demand" changes made by utilities. Also contend that these utilities could pay taxes on the same basis valuation used for the purpose of income tax.

"If the people will stick by me and elect me as a member of the commission I will pledge them my most earnest efforts to obtain these needed reductions."

RACES FOR SENATE AND GOVERNORSHIP HOLD STATE SPOTLIGHT

CRISP COMMITTEE NAMED BY RAWSON

Sixty-Two Atlantans Appointed as Executive Body in Fulton.

Charles A. Rawson, president of the recently organized Young Men's Club of Fulton county, Saturday announced the appointment of 62 young men to the club's executive committee.

The members of the executive committee will hold their first meeting at 5:15 o'clock Monday afternoon in the club's headquarters, 632-33 Healey building, at which plans for the general county campaign will be discussed.

Included in the list are a number of young men who never before have interested themselves in a political campaign, Rawson said.

"Practically the entire membership, as well as the officers of our club, are entirely new in politics," Rawson stated.

"We are working solely because we think Congressman Crisp is the better man for the senate and do not want voters generally to feel that we have banded together as a permanent political organization. When Judge Crisp is elected to the senate we will be through."

The club held Saturday that he was more than gratified with the response to organization movements, adding that not only Fulton county but a number of outstate counties were organizing the young voters in Judge Crisp's behalf.

"The young voters of Cobb county already are drawing plans for a club which is to be organized next week and Morgan county already is organized and the young men in charge have announced that they will enroll 1,000 young men," Mr. Rawson said.

The officers elected by the Morgan county club are: George S. Parker, president; J. Leon Prior, vice president, and A. F. Jenkins, secretary and treasurer.

The following were appointed by Mr. Rawson to the Fulton executive committee:

Horace V. Allen, John B. Applegate, F. M. Bird, Frank Brandon, D. Brooks, Joe Brown, Lawrence C. Burdett, Colquhoun Carter Jr., Wellborn Cody, D. R. Coleman, Boyd Conwell, James F. Cox, Max M. Cuba, Charles Curry, Raymond A. DeVine, Rutherford E. Ellis, E. W. Fountain, Grange Hansell.

John A. Higgins, Francis Gilbert, Frank Gillespie, Sr. Golden, Henry W. Grady Jr., James A. Hayes Jr., Oliver Healey, Dr. Thomas P. Hinman, Ed Holliday, Carlos Hopkins, Albert Howell Jr., Clark Howell Jr., C. O. Johnson, Kendrick K. Kelley, Dr. Herbert B. Kennedy, William Light.

Donald Oberdorfer, Slater Marshall, S. A. Meriwether, T. A. McGahee, Forrest McDuffie, R. A. McGehee, William E. Matthews, T. H. Morris, W. Innis Parker, Harold Pharr, Robert B. Ingram IV, Ralph Pharr, Ralph Quillian, M. A. Reeves, William A. Scurry, William G. Stephens, Freeman Strickland, Basil Stockbridge, Everett Strupher, H. L. Taliaferro, A. L. Terry, William N. Tumlin Jr., Swift Tyler, Gilbert Withers, Bruce Woodruff, Robert Whitley and E. A. Wright.

After speaking at Griffin Friday night, Hamilton Ralls, of Hogansville, candidate for commissioner of agriculture, passed through Atlanta Saturday on his way to south Georgia, where he will continue his campaign.

"In this campaign I am advocating the establishment of market depots in every county seat town in Georgia," Ralls said. "Under this plan the farmers will not be forced to haul their produce long distances; they will stabilize prices; the farmers will be able to make more profit on their products."

"This plan can be carried out successfully by my own knowledge. In Turner county we adopted the plan and I believe the idea of community marketing can be extended to the entire state. I want to impress the fact that this one movement is one of the most important that has faced the farmers in a generation."

"POLITICAL OLYMPICS" TO BE KEY'S SUBJECT

Mayor James L. Key will describe the "National Political Olympics" in his Sunday school class at 9:30 o'clock this morning at the Georgia theater, and Enrico Leide, widely known orchestra director, will lead the class choir.

Ben L. Brooks, president of the class, said the regular lesson concerns the Ten Commandments, and that Key will dwell on the lesson for a time and then take up the modern subject of the present political play "the republican party is making to hoodwink voters of America."

Ramspeck To Speak At Legion Luncheon

Congressman Robert Ramspeck will be the honor guest and principal speaker at the weekly luncheon meeting of the American Legion to be held on the roof of the Ansley Friday at 12:30 o'clock. Ramspeck has been invited to discuss legislation for the veterans.

Dr. R. C. Ewe, chairman of the committee on arrangements, said that the public is invited to the luncheon and speaking. Reservations, at 60 cents per plate, may be made either through the hotel or any officer of the legion.

Congressman Charles R. Crisp and Governor Richard B. Russell Jr., both candidates for the United States senate, have previously spoken to the legion membership here.

ABIT NIX CRITICIZES APATHY IN POLITICS

Says Governor's Race Evoking More General Interest.

GRiffin, Ga., Aug. 13.—Abit Nix said today that his campaign against "a system which fosters apathy that professionals in politics alone are fitted to determine who shall become public officials," is meeting with pronounced success.

Mr. Nix came to Griffin from an intensive tour of south Georgia, where he spoke three and four times daily. He spoke at Adel and Nashville Friday, and at Jackson, Griffin and Thomaston Saturday.

In his campaign addresses this week Mr. Nix also continued discussion of the program which he has placed before the voters in more than 60 counties in the last six months. "This system," he said, "permits local politics to be practically every county in our state to 'virtually dictate the choice of candidates for public office, particularly the governorship. The system of course is fostered by professionals in politics because it gives them the opportunity to practically deliver the votes of their counties, in return for jobs either for themselves, their kinsmen or their friends."

Mr. Nix said, in part: "We have all heard men and women say that they 'take no interest in politics,' a fact of which they are proud. Yet, these same citizens wonder why their state government and their national government do not serve the people as a whole. It is on rare occasions that the merchant, or the farmer, or the laborer associates his own contempt of politics with the increasing failure of government to serve the interests of all the people."

"The solution," he said, "is to have the voters take the duty to vote, and in permitting the professional to determine the selection of public officials, the voters are virtually abandoning the responsibilities of citizenship."

"Time after time where I spoke in south Georgia men and women came to me and told me that they had never before been interested in politics, but that they are determined to see the successful culmination of the campaign I am making."

Abit Nix headquarters in Athens announced in a statement Saturday that "Mr. Nix now has more newspapers, daily and weekly, endorsing him and supporting his candidacy than any other aspirant for the governorship."

"These newspapers," the statement said, "representing every section of this state, indicate how rapidly Mr. Nix's campaign is winning the favor of the public. In his tour of south Georgia this week Mr. Nix was warmly received, and organizations comprising both men and women have become increasingly active in his behalf in most of the counties he visited."

DUCKWORTH AIDE FORESEES VICTORY FOR CANDIDATES

Because his record as a lawyer is well and favorably known to the people of Georgia, Senator W. H. Duckworth will be named attorney-general on September 14, Marshall Allison, his campaign manager, said in a statement here Saturday.

Allison's statement said: "The reception given Mr. Duckworth in his visit to the counties in the southeastern part of the state reflects the growing interest in his candidacy. The people realize that in naming an attorney-general the state simply employs a lawyer to represent the community, it is choosing the state's attorney-general the same basic principles should apply as an individual would use in the selection of an attorney to represent him in a case before a court. An individual looks to the record of his prospective lawyer to ascertain if he is active, able and experienced. He further learns whether his lawyer can be depended on to be vigorous and fearless in prosecution or defense. In a like manner the voters of Georgia know that these qualifications are even more necessary upon the part of the attorney-general. With the well-known record of W. H. Duckworth to meet every test of the office the people will put their stamp of approval on him on September 14."

CRISP HEADSCITE EDITORIAL PRAISE

Russell Paper Printed Laudatory Comment on Opponent March 27.

Pointing out that there is a growing resentment on the part of the press because of Governor Richard B. Russell's statement that the support of the newspapers has been purchased by Congressman Charles R. Crisp, Crisp headquarters in Atlanta Saturday issued a statement quoting an Atlanta Journal editorial of March 27, 1932, captioned "Charles Crisp, Statesman," and asked if Governor Russell inferred this editorial had been purchased.

"Increasing resentment is manifest on the part of the press of Georgia over Governor Russell's several statements that the support of the newspapers has been purchased by Congressman Charles R. Crisp. In one of his most recent speeches Governor Russell declared that it was time for the press to work for an 'unpurchasable press,' and thereby insinuated that the editors of the newspapers of Georgia could be swayed in their duty by mercenary influence."

"In one of his original speeches, Governor Russell charged that Mr. Crisp bought the support of the newspapers for an advertising campaign, and in his original speech over the radio on the night of July 12 Mr. Crisp defended the newspaper editors as men and women whose support could not be purchased."

"The editors of Georgia have done notable work in promoting the growth of this Empire State of the South, and today when many of them are desirous of sending Mr. Crisp to a higher office where he can continue the great work he has done for the people of Georgia, they are not to be faulted for supporting him."

"Governor Russell in his speeches also goes on to say that he denounces certain disinterested newspapers of other states which have taken occasion to praise Mr. Crisp for his splendid services and to express the hope that the people of Georgia would see fit to send him to the senate."

Journal Lauded Crisp.

"When Mr. Crisp as acting chairman of the ways and means committee of the house placed his country above his political future, the Atlanta Journal on March 27, 1932, paid lofty tribute to him in an editorial entitled, 'Charles Crisp, Statesman.'"

"Surely Governor Russell does not now infer that this editorial was purchased, or that Mr. Crisp did not merit it at the commendation of a leading newspaper of the state. The Atlanta Journal is quite naturally supporting Mr. Russell for the senate. At the same time it is generously giving space in its columns to news of Mr. Crisp's campaign activities, which we greatly appreciate."

"The Journal editorial of March 27 reads: 'Exemplar of Statesmanship.'"

"In times too often characterized by small politics, Congressman Charles R. Crisp stands out as an exemplar of large-minded statesmanship. This is true of his entire career as representative of the third Georgia district, but especially of his conduct during the arduous and delicate session of the house."

"As acting chairman of the ways and means committee he has borne the brunt of the herculean labor of balancing the nation's budget. His responsibility to his party has been great, still greater to his country; and he has shouldered it with a wisdom, a steadiness and a courage that demand the heartiest respect of the whole congress and that deserve the thanks of the American people."

"Tower of Strength."

"In his self-revealing words spoken from the floor last week, he said: 'This treasury deficit is a republican deficit. But it is the duty of the house under the constitution to propose revenue levies to pay the cost of running the government. I do not regard it as a political question, but as a governmental question. I am going to continue the policy of considering it as a governmental question.'"

"There spoke the statesman as distinguished from the mere partisan or opportunist. If there were more like Charles R. Crisp, ours would be a better government and a happier nation. Georgia is rightly proud of him, and a formed people are proud to know him as a tower of strength."

HOWARD CHILDREN, FRIENDS WILL PLAN JUDGE'S CAMPAIGN

Schoolmates of the children of Judge G. H. Howard, who seeks re-election to Fulton superior court, will organize for the campaign at a meeting at Judge Howard's home, 1057 Lucille avenue, S. W., at 8 o'clock Tuesday night, Charles Howard, Jr., said.

Ernest Howard, managers of their father's campaign, announced Saturday.

Judge Howard is conducting a quiet campaign and does not plan any speeches, he was said. "He hopes and believes that the people know his record and will endorse it," the youthful managers announced. "That is all the campaign we are making, and it certainly is fine to have so many friends among the lawyers and citizens to volunteer to help us."

The campaign committee of school mates of Judge Howard's children is composed of voters between 21 and 25 years of age. "While these young men and young ladies have been called the 'Kindergarten Crowd,' the splendid work already done shows that they will give a good account of themselves and will have a big share in the victory of September 14," the managers said.

CHEAP TEXTBOOKS FOR STATE PUPILS AIM OF COLLINS

M. D. Collins, candidate for state superintendent of schools, in a statement in Atlanta Saturday declared that his election will mean cheaper schoolbooks for the children of Georgia.

"The legislature," said Mr. Collins, "has made it possible for the people to get their schoolbooks at as low price as the books are sold in any other state. This law must be applied and enforced. Many farmers in Georgia will not get enough for their cotton crop this fall to pay for schoolbooks for the children. Others will find that they cannot use the perfectly good schoolbooks they now have, on account of the books having been changed."

"This rapid changing of schoolbooks and high prices must stop. Plans must be worked out by the state school superintendent. The legislature will enact any necessary legislation."

Walter Cowart, of Union City, manager of the Collins campaign, declared that his candidate is receiving statewide encouragement.

Warm Praise Given Crisp By Noted Georgia Papers

Covering a wide range of discussion of the issues of the campaign, both the daily and weekly press of Georgia continue editorially to urge the elevation of Congressman Charles R. Crisp to the United States senate.

Many of the state papers, which formerly gave enthusiastic support to the governor and his program, have been sharp critics of his ambition to go to the senate.

The Constitution has culled and herewith presents some of the more epigrammatic comment of the press appearing within the past few days:

Albany Herald: He denounces Mr. Crisp for his attitude, then praises the late Senator Harris as a man who never betrayed the interest of the people. And the position of Senator Harris on the moratorium was in perfect harmony with the position of Mr. Crisp.

Savannah Press: The man whom Governor Russell appointed to the senate is really older than Mr. Crisp.

Cordele Dispatch: Even those who oppose Crisp have to admit his strength.

Savannah Morning News: It all depends . . . Now comes a proposal to cancel part of the obligation of the W. & A. railroad. The legislature will have to determine that matter.

Greensboro Herald Journal: "The Georgia Press is full of a brakeman coupling freight cars. No matter which way the train goes, he is on the jump."

Representative Crisp has not only won a place in the hearts of his constituents but his colleagues in congress as well.

Ocala Star: To read Governor Russell's reply to . . . one gathers the idea that the first to use personalities he had an exclusive right to that form of campaigning.

Brunswick Pilot: Enlarged by both democrats and republicans, they all expressed the hope that the people of Georgia would send him to the senate.

Millen News: It is quite natural that the Atlanta Journal should make a desperate effort to put Little Dick in the senate, but the people of Georgia will not pay Editor Cohen's political debt.

Doerun Courier: As the people have elected Mr. Crisp to times in succession, we figure that he must have been a rather faithful old scout and that he is now worthy of promotion to the senate.

His record in congress, his known integrity and ability, his frankness on every issue in winning him new friends and holding his old.

Butler Herald: Some of the strongest and best editorial expressions we have seen in many years in the weekly papers are those favoring Crisp for the senate.

Millen News: A man who cannot swim ought not to have to be kept out of the water beyond his depth and "Little Dick" has only himself to be blamed for being literally "drowned" in his debate with Congressman Crisp.

Dalton Citizen: The question is, is it right for Senator Cohen to vote against the bill for the elevation of Congressman Crisp to do the same thing.

Macon Telegraph: He has shown a breadth of vision and a freedom from narrow partisanship that is rare and valuable. He has amply earned promotion.

Albany Herald: He has earned the promotion he seeks, if demonstrated ability and ripe experience are to be considered in determining the question of succession.

Pearson Tribune: We supported Mr. Russell for governor but we cannot for the United States senate as we consider Mr. Crisp much better qualified for the place.

Camilla Enterprise: He is a statesman who never dodges an issue and who is yet to "pussyfoot" on a question. He votes his convictions and his political honesty is unblemished as is his private character.

Bulloch Times: Which is worse, Crisp's $120 electricity tax or Russell's $20 gasoline tax? Just let the voter answer that!

Dalton Citizen: He has done a wonderful job well, but would have done it better if he had had his wits.

Savannah Press: The father won promotion to the senate and who shall say that the son is not deserving of this high station which he asks from the people of Georgia?

Polham Journal: In other words, the governor got some of the stuff in his face he had been throwing at Mr. Crisp and then cried about it.

Harlem News: Charles R. Crisp stands up and tells the cock-eyed world what he thinks.

Savannah Morning News: Crisp is a statesman. He has been more than once ready to sacrifice his own fortunes for the sake of the principle at issue.

Swainsboro Forest Blade: We have always opposed a sales tax, but that he could be right. As to the bonus, we are heartily in accord with his vote.

Cordele Dispatch: Wish we were as certain of everything as that Charles R. Crisp will be the senator from Georgia to succeed the late William J. Harris.

Millen News: With Crisp in the senate, Thomas W. Hardwick governor and Franklin D. Roosevelt president, the dark clouds of pessimism which have engulfed the state will vanish.

Douglas County Sentinel: One "artist" would have us believe that Crisp, and Crisp alone, made us human beings pay all the taxes on earth. Oh, well, such is politics.

Waycross Journal Herald: Both republicans and democrats

WIDE APPROVAL OF DRIVE IS SEEN BY JULE W. FELTON

Jule W. Felton, candidate for reelection as a member of the public service commission, returned to Atlanta Saturday from a trip to northwest Georgia. He said:

"On this trip I found that many of my friends are active in my behalf and that they are working to have me elected to a full term on the commission."

"General approval was expressed of my resolution adopted by the commission which provides that motor carriers must render continuous and dependable service or else surrender their certificates. It is not fair to permit these lines to operate in prosperous times and to cease operations during less prosperous times."

MRS. HEALEY RAPS HOOVER'S SWITCH

Wet Leader Says Attempted Coup Doomed To Defeat.

President Hoover not only did not do his cause any good but lost votes in his switch on the prohibition law, Mrs. William T. Healey, Georgia chairman for the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform said Saturday in a statement from Chatham, Mass., where she is vacationing.

"The president, who long ago had lost the confidence of the wet, now has lost the dry and has contributed to his impending defeat by his action on the dry law, Mrs. Healey said."

In a message accompanying the statement, Mrs. Healey said she would assist in the nomination of congressmen who have pledged themselves to submit the question of repeal to the people.

Americus Times Recorder: Many things about Mr. Russell's record in the legislature and the governor's chair, which the governor would have much preferred remain unmentioned, were laid before the voters.

Thomasville Times Enterprise: He is decidedly a high-type man, a type that will command respect and admiration no matter where he may be placed.

Ocala Star: His experience . . . qualifies him for immediate service in the senate which his opponent, in spite of the fact that he is governor, cannot hope to have until much of his term has expired.

Cordele Dispatch: Down in Waycross Mr. Russell predicted victory for Roosevelt and an end of republican misrule, but gave Charles Crisp credit for all the wrongs perpetrated by the republican administration.

Dalton Citizen: And Governor Russell referred to Charlie Crisp as "an old man." He says he didn't but he did. The Savannah Press reminds its readers that the man the governor appointed to the senate is older than Crisp. Crisp is just at the age when statesmen have earned the value of horse sense.

Kingsland Southeast Georgian: If the situation is as appears to us politically in Georgia, Governor Russell is trying to seek refuge in the senate. He knows that all that rhyme old reorganization and saving of state expenses was probably bunk, and the cost of state government will be the same if not more. He is afraid of a second term as governor.

Doerun Courier: As the people have elected Mr. Crisp to times in succession, we figure that he must have been a rather faithful old scout and that he is now worthy of promotion to the senate.

STATE DEMOCRATS TO HEAR PARKLEY

Plans for National Drive Will Be Laid at Macon in October

Democratic leaders of Georgia Saturday were called to meet at Macon on either October 4 or October 20, to map plans for a campaign to bring out a big vote for the party nominees for president and vice president.

Lawrence S. Camp, chairman of the state democratic executive committee, called the meeting and said that the date would depend on whether or not there was a run-over for governor and that Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, the keynote speaker at the national convention at Chicago, will make the principal address.

Camp has just returned from a conference with national leaders and it was decided that the state and local organizations in each state would have charge of the campaign for Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt and Speaker John N. Garner, the party standardbearers.

The call for the Macon meeting specifically designated all democratic committeemen, municipal, county, district and state.

"The meetings of democratic state chairmen," Camp said, "called by Chairman Farley of the national democratic committee and held during the week at national headquarters in New York, mark the beginning of the most active campaign planned in every state ever carried on for the election of a national democratic ticket."

"Because of the economic conditions that have prevailed under republican administrations, seriously affecting practically every business and every individual in the United States, the committee chairman from every state express extreme optimism over the chance of national headquarters Roosevelt and Speaker Garner."

"The speech of acceptance made by President Hoover Thursday night was a masterpiece of statesmanship and leaves the voters to express their choice for a change in present economic conditions or a continuation of them."

"The plan of campaign adopted by the national committee places the full responsibility for the party's success upon those who are honored to serve as members of the several democratic executive committees in the states."

"In Georgia this responsibility is placed under this plan, upon the national committeeman, the national committeewoman and on each member of the municipal democratic executive committee, county democratic executive committee, senatorial district executive committee, congressional district executive committee and upon the state committee. I assured the national campaign committee that the members of Georgia's several democratic committees would gladly assume responsibility in this state."

"In these conferences, I expressed it as my opinion that Georgia desired, because of the fact that Governor Roosevelt is a part-time resident here and that Speaker Garner is a southerner, to give the democratic ticket the largest percentage of votes of any state in the union."

TREASURY NEEDS MAN OF TRAINING, HAMILTON SAYS

Saying that Georgians have realized they should elect a technically trained man for treasurer instead of a figurehead, George B. Hamilton, of Atlanta, Saturday expressed confidence that he would be nominated.

"I have from the very beginning waged a campaign placing before the voters of Georgia what I believe to be the necessary qualifications for a candidate for the important office of state treasurer," stated Mr. Hamilton. "Side by side with this, I have frankly set forth my own qualifications for the people to judge for themselves. From the reports coming to me, the voters of Georgia are realizing that it is no longer sound business judgment to place the disbursing and handling of millions of dollars in the hands of a figurehead as state treasurer, who finds it necessary to employ a technically trained man as an assistant treasurer, to give the democratic expressions coming to me plainly show that the people of Georgia think they should and must elect a technically qualified man as their treasurer, who will operate the department himself and not be a figurehead. I feel confident in predicting an overwhelming victory for my policies in the coming primary on September 14."

SCHOOLBOYS APPOINT WILLIAMS SECRETARY

William Fort Williams, pioneer citizen of Atlanta, will serve as secretary-treasurer of the Pioneer School-Club until the next election of officers, according to announcement by Colonel Sam W. Wilkes, president. Having served as treasurer of the club, he was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of James L. Logan.

Mr. Williams is well known to Atlanta, having lived here all of his 73 years. His father served three terms as mayor, immediately after the cessation of Civil War hostilities. For 58 years he was connected with the Alexander Hardware Company of Atlanta's pioneer business houses.

Big Crowd Gathers for Fox Reopening

Brilliant decorations of the Fox theater and a long line of patrons waiting to buy tickets Friday night when the theater reopened under local ownership and management after having been dark for several weeks.

The opening picture was Frank Buck's "Bring 'Em Back Alive," a wild animal film. The house was crowded.

POLITICAL PATRONAGE CHARGED BY BULLARD

Accuses Harrison of "Rewarding" Wilhoit by "Huge Fees."

Charges that Jud P. Wilhoit, now a member of the state highway board, was rewarded for his part in "manipulating" the nomination at the Macon convention of Comptroller-General William B. Harrison by the payment of "huge fees" was made in a statement issued Saturday by E. M. Bullard, Harrison's opponent in the primary race.

"Harrison rewarded Wilhoit," Bullard said, "by appointing him one of the members of the Georgia Highway Board, a position of honor and influence, in a suit filed against the National Benefit Life Insurance Company of Washington, D. C. This suit is No. 90,598 on the docket of the Fulton superior court. On December 14, 1931, an order was passed allowing Wilhoit and other lawyers a total of $7,500."

"This is a plain case of 'you scratch my back and I scratch yours,' Wilhoit, to my personal knowledge and the knowledge of hundreds of others, was actively in charge of the work at Macon which resulted in the disfranchisement of the voters of 71 counties who had cast a majority of 1,199 votes for General Parker and had given him a tie in the county unit vote. Harrison simply paid off by giving Wilhoit the first pick of that cash along."

"He denies that he has employees in his office who receive more than $8,000 per year. On page 62 of the 'Edwards Grafters' Bible' the name of an estimable lady who works for Harrison is listed as drawing $4,500 a year in the department of insurance. On page 63 the same lady is listed as drawing a salary of $2,100 per year under the head of 'collection of insurance agents' occupation tax.' This is more than the comptroller general draws and I am stating the principle of any employee, man or woman, drawing more than the head of the department."

PARKER'S WIDOW DEMANDS FELTON RESIGN HIS POST

Mrs. Calvin W. Parker, candidate for the place on the public service commission to which her late husband was elected two years ago, in a statement issued Saturday demanded that Jule W. Felton, who now occupies the place, should resign because of connections of his family with various public utilities.

"Mr. Felton's father is attorney for the 'Georgia Power Company,' Mrs. Parker said. 'His father is attorney for the telephone company, a member of his family is secretary for a telephone office. The law disqualifies him as a juror in cases affecting the public utility industry. How can he run the department beyond this, I have my claim to the office upon the fact that I possess superior qualifications over any one else in the race.'"

PLATFORM OUTLINED BY ROBERT S. ELROD

Equalization of the burden of taxation, relief for Grady hospital and Battle Hill sanitarium, and fair competition between buses, trucks and railroads are favored by Robert S. Elrod, of 578 Cooper street, candidate for the legislature from Fulton county, in a platform issued Saturday. Elrod is opposing Representative Luther Still.

Elrod's platform is as follows: 1. Efficiency, economy and honesty in the administration of local, state and federal affairs. 2. The elimination of waste and extravagance wherever any exists in the conduct of the public affairs. 3. Payment of the state, county and city's obligations to its teachers, old soldiers and others. 4. Favor the equalization of the burden of taxation, and am opposed to any increase in taxation, and will work to prevent same from being enacted. 5. All employees of the local government should be paid at the same time, rather than staggered, as is now the case with the others. There should be no discrimination as between groups. 6. Favor relief for Grady hospital and the Battle Hill sanitarium. 7. Favor relief for Grady hospital and the Battle Hill sanitarium. 8. I will oppose bills dictated by small groups which have not been exposed to the people and public approval given to them. I expect to see the state budget slipped through the legislature at the last minute of the session. 9. Public employees should be selected by the heads of the departments on the basis of their efficiency as public servants, rather than on the basis that they are control votes. The public employees must be paid what the job is worth. I don't care how low pay, but at the same time, I don't want to see the money wasted in salaries that are too high. I will advocate what the people of Fulton county may want done. I will speak to them plainly and tell them why, if I find opposition to what they want.

KELLEY COMPLETES NORTH GEORGIA DRIVE

Appeals to Voters To Select "Men of Reason."

DALTON, Ga., Aug. 13.—Making his eleventh speech of the week here this morning, John I. Kelley, candidate for governor, completed his first invasion of north Georgia and stated "that he was more than gratified with the reception given him."

Kelley spoke at 10 o'clock to an enthusiastic audience in the Whitfield county courthouse. Stating that it is dangerous for the people to permit factionalism, bossism and incompetence to continue, Kelley advocated a return to Jeffersonian principles of "government for the people."

"Too long," said Kelley, "have the people of this nation allowed special interests and corrupt officials to rule while they engage in factional fights which are detrimental to the common good. I believe that the time has come for the people of Georgia to rouse themselves and scan the records of those who offer for office. There are men in every race who appeal to emotion instead of reason. Men of reason are needed now."

Following the speech Kelley said that reports coming to him indicate unusually strong support in north Georgia. One friend of the candidate who has recently returned from a trip into south Georgia told Kelley it was "surprising how the people in middle and south Georgia are turning to you as the man to center on."

BROOKE AND TINDALL FORM PARTNERSHIP

Byron Brooke, former manager of the municipal bond department of the Citizens and Southern Company, and Julian W. Tindall, former vice president of J. H. Hillman and Company, announced on Saturday the formation of a new investment firm to be known as Brooke, Tindall and Company, with offices in the Citizens and Southern National Bank building. Both members have been in the investment business for 15 years.

U. S. Air Racers To Reach Atlanta August 22 on Flight of 2,475 Miles

Each contestant in the Cord cup race of the national sweepstakes handicapped air derby, which will inaugurate the national air races at Cleveland, will fly an average of more than 2,400 miles between the starting cities and Cleveland, the contest committee announced Saturday. The Atlantic wing of the cup race will reach Atlanta on Monday, August 22.

The eastern contingent will cover 1,443 miles from Washington to the western wing, starting at Los Angeles, will cover 1,551 miles to Bartlesville, in the four days from Sunday, August 21, and Wednesday night, August 24. Official distance which both divisions will cover between Bartlesville and Cleveland is 924 miles, making a total of 2,475 miles for the western wing, and 2,367 for the eastern wing, or a difference of 108 miles.

Over-Sea

BY BYRON DARTON.
Associated Press Cable Editor.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Government constitutions wear out more quickly these days than they used to, just as houses do and clothing and dispositions. A case in point is Germany.

The thirteenth birthday of the German constitution was celebrated this week and the celebration was a razing party.

When the fundamental law of the German republic was written at Weimar at the close of the war it supposedly was based on the experience of democratic nations throughout the world. An effort was made to set up the best possible form of government. For instance, there was the system of apportioning seats in the reichstag.

The German theory was that all minorities should be properly represented. To insure this the "list system" was established under which each party names a list of candidates, one of whom is declared elected for each 60,000 votes cast for the party.

In other words, there is no necessity for a reichstag member to pass any electoral test in his own specific district. The leaders of each party are insured places in the reichstag, if they so desire, as the parties themselves determine which of their candidates will represent them.

Here was a method supposed to accomplish two great things—representation for minorities and the seating of the best political minds in the country. Yet it is one of the sections of the constitution on which strong criticism has been concentrated.

Thus Chancellor Von Papen told the Associated Press the other day that he strongly opposes a system in which the voter has no hand in nominating his reichstag representative and in which there is no contact between voter and candidate.

But the objection to the German constitution runs a little deeper than this. The yearners for the good old days of the monarchy see it as an instrument which has ripped the fatherland to pieces instead of keeping it firmly united. They would like to make the constitution over on lines that would make possible a government more nearly akin to the government before the war.

The process has been reflected in recent political developments in Germany. Theoretically the nation should be governed by a cabinet in which the reichstag represents confidence, but the present administration has never been tested in the legislature.

Adolf Hitler appears to be getting closer and closer to absolute power, no matter what setbacks he may encounter on the way. If he does achieve his goal, there will be a thoroughgoing house cleaning for the poor old Weimar constitution.

WEALTH SPURNED BY FRENCH BEAUTY

Queen Appreciates Visit to America But Couldn't Stay Here a Year.

BY MARY KNIGHT.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—(UP)—While being a French beauty queen made it possible for Mlle. Germaine Laborde to visit Galveston, New York, Chicago and Miami, she was not so loyal that she is glad to have seen those "extraordinary places" but, personally, she wouldn't care to live in them.

"Terribly interesting, yes," she said, "and I was offered $1,000 a week to stay for a year and sing on the concert stage night. But I refused. Not that I do not like money, I do, but not enough to stay a whole year in America."

On her return to France, Mlle. Laborde played with Mistinguett at the Casino de Paris in the revue, Paris-Miss. Her education has been musical since early childhood. Her contribution in the way of advice to the promoters of beauty pageants, however, is that "those whom the judges select as beauty queens, it seems to me, should be encouraged in the direction their talents lie, rather than being lured into other fields. If, for instance, she loves art, she should be helped to further a career in that direction; if the theater is her hobby, then all well and good. Whatever the vocation, however, it should be followed with the publicity and encouragement that is attended here as queen, instead of strange people in strange countries tempting her to do things she knows nothing about."

After being "Miss Agen," "Miss France," and "Miss Europe," Mlle. Germaine Laborde has a sensible little brunette head has not been turned by all these honors for she has promised to marry a humble merchant from her home town in the valley of the Garonne.

Her election as "Miss Europe" last year was the first time that a French girl had received this title. Her main Street was justly proud for the fairest daughter of Agen was not a sophisticated Parisienne.

These daughters of France seem to possess all of the sturdy quality that is immune to the glittering temptations of the theater, the movie, the glamor of the great establishments of haute couture and matrimony—this last with the exception of Miss Juilla. Tempted by all these things, she says quite frankly: "Yes, I could have married lots of rich men, but I happen to love a poor man from a small town. We're going to be married soon and, like the story books say, 'live happily ever after.'"

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

MENACE TO POWER AGAIN CONFRONTS RUMANIAN RULER

Political Leaders of Little Monarchy Show Less and Less Inclination To Co-operate With Throne on National Policies.

FEUD WITH MANIU ROOT OF TROUBLE

Party Chief Who Brought Carol Back From Exile Now Finds Power Removed by King's Plan.

BY H. A. PETERS.

BERLIN, Aug. 13.—(UP)—King Carol again is in difficulties with his leading politicians and the differences of opinion may easily result in an openly anti-Carol movement—more easily than is generally known.

Recent elections have, if anything, intensified the feeling against Carol in that the national peasant party which won a majority in the parliament, has declined to form a new government because it objects to Carol's reluctance to relinquish the reins of power to political parties.

The kernel of this situation lies in the personal feud between Carol and his erstwhile sponsor, Julius Maniu, dictator of the national peasants. It was Maniu who brought Carol back to the throne from exile, but now he refuses to assume open leadership of the government because he feels that, with the king following his present policies, he will be only a nominal figure.

Maniu wants the real power himself, in the name of the party which has received the backing of the largest mass of voters.

Cold to Throne.

Other leading politicians are just as cold to any suggestion of co-operation with the throne. Thus Alexander Averescu, twice premier, folk party leader and Carol's former confidant, has become more and more hostile to the king's policies.

The open breach came along before the elections when the venerable Averescu told the king that the place to solve Rumanian problems was in the parliament, not in the royal castle. Since then, Averescu's paper, Indepentarea, has been open in its criticism of Carol's intimate advisers and retinue. An indirect allusion was contained in a recent article, printed in the political section without comment, reviewing the life of Mme. Dabary and emphasizing her influence on the court of Louis XV. The significance of this broad reference to Mme. Lupescu was not lost on the public.

Some for Carol.

So much for the outspoken opponents of Carol's policies. In another influential quarter, the liberal party, sentiment is divided for and against Carol, but the pro-Carol element led by George Bratianu, might also be persuaded to desert him if it were offered a chance to share in office-holding and the rewards that go with it.

Toward the other, and strongest section of the liberals, Carol is suspicious although he maintains outwardly a friendly attitude toward them. Ion George Duca, Bratianu, on the other hand, has stood for Carol from the moment of his return. But his liberals also are chafing under a four years' enforced absence from the scene of Rumanian politics. The army, however, remains loyal to Carol, the explanation being why a showdown has not yet been called.

Ileana's First-Born Expected Momentarily

VIENNA, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Archduke Anton, third son of Emperor Charles, and down the garden of Moedling Villa today, his ancient lineage almost forgotten in distraction of a young man about to become a father.

Inside the villa, a famous Viennese specialist remained at the bedside of Princess Ileana, of Rumania, who awaited the birth of her first child. Her mother, the Duchess Queen Marie, was there, and so was her sister, the Queen of Yugoslavia. All around the queen private detectives kept the curious away.

This evening attending specialists announced that there was no cause for anxiety.

More Bloodshed Foreseen in Cuba As Political Peace Efforts Fail

HAVANA, Aug. 13.—(AP)—"Laborantism"—wild talk—has put an apparent end to the newest efforts to reconcile Cuba's opposing political factions.

As a result, this capital sees slight hope for immediate termination of the blood letting that has taken some score of lives in the last month.

Secretary of State Orestes Ferrera, recently came from Washington, where he served President Machado's government as ambassador, and 78-year-old Juan Gualberto Gomez, hero of Cuba's wars for independence, one of the founders of the opposition nationalist union and almost the only opposition leader qualified to speak, were

Restoration of Throne Looming in Bavaria

WUERZBURG, Bavaria, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Rallying to their former loyalty to the Wittelsbach family, thousands of Bavarians are expecting an early proclamation of a restored monarchy in this German state.

Prince Rupprecht, 63-year-old heir to the defunct throne, is the center of the movement and managers of the campaign claim that their cause is gaining converts daily.

Dr. George Heim, peasant leader of the Bavarian people's party, said that "undoubtedly 75 per cent of the population are convinced monarchists."

"If Bavaria's independence should be endangered at any moment from any direction," he said, "it can be said with certainty that at that same moment the monarchy will be reared again."

"Bavarians prefer to be ruled by a king rather than by a president. Our Wittelsbach kings always conducted democratic regimes and they were loved by the people."

There is plenty of evidence that this regard for the former reigning house has been bestowed upon the aging Rupprecht. War veterans who followed him when he led the Bavarian legions into France always pay him full honors when he visits their reunions.

"Blue and white days," dedicated to the colors of Bavaria, have become common, every little town striving to arrange one that will not clash with other engagements of the ex-crown prince.

Rupprecht attends these observances in uniform with a huge white plume streaming from his helmet and with royal decorations gleaming on his chest.

Neustadt's "blue and white" celebration the prince spoke strongly for maintenance of Bavaria's independence.

"Bavaria must reject any attempt aiming at centralizing the reich after French principles," he said. "Germany's vital power lies in a state such as Bismarck created and to maintain such a nation must be our chief effort."

BRITONS CENSURE GIRL SCOUT WORK PERU FOR POLICIES UNHURT BY SLUMP

Laborites Protest Cerro's Treatment of Leader of Aprista Party.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—(AP)—The Daily Herald said today George Lansbury, as leader of the British labor party, and telegraphed a strong protest to President Sanchez Cerro, of Peru, against the Peruvian government's treatment of political opponents.

"We are astounded and ashamed," the Herald deplored the reports of shocking measures of revenge against the workers and students of Peru. We trust the report is unfounded that your republic may bring shame to its name by taking the life of Victor Raoul Haya De La Torre, who has so many friends among us and who shares our ideals."

Senator Haya De La Torre is the leader of the aprista party and was the opposition candidate at the last election against President Sanchez Cerro.

Recently he was charged with plotting against the safety of the country and slated for trial by court-martial. There were reports he would be sentenced to death if convicted.

Spanish Deputies Seek To Deport Monarchists

SEVILLE, Spain, Aug. 13.—(AP)—The deputies to the Cortes met today to petition the government to deport all members of monarchist organizations as a result of last Wednesday's abortive monarchist rebellion.

They also asked for the dissolution of the Seville Academy of Fine Arts, the Noblemen's Riding Club and all other organizations of a monarchist tendency.

General Jose Sanjurjo, leader of the revolt, was transferred to a military prison at Madrid yesterday to await trial for treason. Some factions demanded he be put to death, but there were indications his fate would not be so severe.

'Kidnaped' Girl Found, Believed Merely Lost

WARSAW, Poland, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Police, after a night spent in seeking a man they believed kidnapped five-year-old Patricia McMillin, daughter of United States Consul Stewart E. McMillin, of Lawrence, Kan., said today they believed the child had merely been lost and found.

Police said they believed Patricia had strayed away and the man was a pedestrian who tried to show her the way home, but was baffled by inability to understand English.

No. 44—LENIN'S TOMB

BY RAYMOND P. BRANDT.

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., Aug. 13.—One of the many anecdotes told—but not printed—in Russia recounts the fiction that when the exiled Trotsky returned to Moscow and saw the striking monument of his old comrade in the famous Red square outside the Kremlin walls, Trotsky is quoted as saying: "Although dead, you are living; I, although living, am dead."

It is difficult to imagine what the rational and materialistic Lenin would say if he could see the impressive and expensive pile erected to house his body and perpetuate his memory, which he fought religion as an opiate of the people, who jeered at traditional spiritual feelings, has become a Soviet saint whose words are accepted—and interpreted—as the commandments of one who possessed higher powers than those of man. His tomb has become a shrine and about the place is a religious awe. Malignant people say that his spirit comes up from the tomb to inspire bolshevik leaders when they speak from the platform atop the magnificent monument to the assembly of multitudes below. This respect which borders on worship, contrasts the impersonal and naturalistic communist philosophy.

AMERICAN FUNDS AID IN FIGHTING FAMINE IN CHINA

$500,000 Irrigation System Opened Up in Shensi Province in Latest Step in Long Battle.

Prince Rupprecht, World War commander and ex-crown prince of Bavaria, is the hub of a movement for restoration of the monarchy in that German state.

SIENFU, China, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Partly financed by American famine relief funds, an irrigation system costing nearly $500,000 has been opened up in the heart of Shensi province. The work is called the Wei Pei irrigation project, after the valley in which it is situated.

Efforts to construct a permanent irrigation scheme in this region have been made through the centuries. Evidence of work carried out under the Han, Ming and Manchou dynasties exists in the form of crude intakes, tunnels and stone bridges grotesquely carved with dragons and other mythological figures.

Mud Menace Conquered.

Alongside a 2,000-year-old canal dug by China's ancient emperors modern engineers have now completed a project which will convey water from the King river to 100,000 acres of Chinese farmland.

The old canal has existed since 240 B. C. but at times the water contains as much as 45 per cent of silt. Gates in the new canal will eliminate mud which formerly had to be dug out before the water could be used.

Transportation of an American-made three-ton rock drilling apparatus to the interior of Shensi, far beyond the silent tombs of the Han rulers who first inspired the work, constituted a serious difficulty. It called for a nine-day journey, the building of a new highway for the last two miles of the 800-mile journey from Tientsin.

Because the major part of the $100,000 required for its construction was raised among American and Chinese residents of Honolulu, one of the largest contributions to the China famine relief, New York, with the stipulation that the money be used in Shensi province.

The scheme is part of the China international famine relief commission's nationwide program to eliminate the conditions which cause chronic famine in China. It was carried out in co-operation with the provincial authorities, who contributed about $200,000 towards the cost.

The value of farming land in the Wei Pei region has risen by about 400 per cent and authorities are trying to prevent the farmers from being victimized by speculators.

$5,000,000 Fire Sweeps Buildings in Manila

MANILA, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Fire swept through three blocks of the old walled city of Manila tonight, destroying the building of the bureau of public works, two colleges, the Ateneo museum and other structures antedating the American regime. The loss was estimated as high as $5,000,000.

The colleges burned were the Ateneo de Manila and the Santa Isabel, the latter a girls' school.

Flames roared through the structures, mostly wood, for three hours. Many records of the public works bureau and the branch insular land registration office were lost.

U. S. Defends Freedom Of Press in Madrid

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—(UP)—American officials are unsympathetic with any project to censor international press messages, it was learned authoritatively today after Editor and Publisher, newspaper periodical, charged that the Madrid radio-telegraph conference planned to consider limitation of the freedom of the press.

The article was circulated among state department officials and attracted considerable attention. Officials there withheld quotable comment.

Pretty Young Widow Monopolizes Wales

VENICE, Italy, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Mrs. Cecile Kraus, an attractive young widow spending the season at the Lido, nearly monopolized the attention of the Prince of Wales at a dance last night and swam with him and Prince George this morning before they left by airplane for Corfu to review the British naval squadron.

The Prince of Wales danced almost the whole evening with her and then invited her to swim this morning. Mrs. Kraus, described as well to do, lives at Turin, but is understood to be partly of Hungarian ancestry.

Newest Marconi Discovery Permits 'Bending' Ultra-Short Radio Waves

ROME, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Guglielmo Marconi has made another advance in the science of radio communication, he disclosed today, by "bending" ultra-short radio waves which heretofore he had been unable to transmit through obstacles.

From his yacht Eletra in the Gulf of Aranci, he sent a message to his long-distance collaborator, Marchese Luigi Solari, announcing he had sent messages, on a 51 centimeter wave from Rocca Di Papa to Capo Ferro, in Sardinia, a distance of 270 kilometers. He used portable reflectors, communicating clearly both by radio telegraph and radio telephone.

LOVAL OFFICIALS IRISH ISSUE PLEAS FOR INDEPENDENCE

DUBLIN, Irish Free State, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Eamon De Valera, president of the Free State, was beleaguered from two sides today to declare the independence of a republic of Ireland.

The Anphoblacht, organ of the Irish republican army, an unofficial organization which demands independence, said in an editorial headed "An Emphatic Answer to De Valera" that the mere abolition of the oath of allegiance to King George would not alter the republican position.

The editorial continued, "has entered a solemn compact to guard and defend the Irish republic against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and it cannot lay down its arms or rest until the republic is a reality."

At the same time the newspaper, "United Irishman," organ of former President William T. Cosgrave, conservative leader, attacked De Valera as acting illogically in not declaring a republic.

Such a procedure, it said, would certainly be damaging, but would probably be less so than De Valera's policy of governing the Irish State by a sort of conspiracy with the Irish republican army.

Both incidents followed the announcement Thursday of an organization known as the Free State Committee of governing the Irish State by a sort of conspiracy with the Irish republican army.

Edge's Memorandum On Treaty Studied

PARIS, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Experts at the foreign office were making a thorough study today of Ambassador Walter E. Edge's memorandum regarding a Franco-American commercial treaty preparatory to the French reply, which now is expected by the end of next week.

Formal discussions will then open with M. Elbel, director of commercial affairs in the ministry of commerce and Auguste Couleuvre, vice director of commercial affairs in the ministry of foreign affairs, representing France.

Prof. Augusti Piccard Plans Flight Tuesday

ZURICH, Switzerland, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Professor Augusti Piccard, scientist from Belgium, said today he would not be able to take off for his second adventure into the stratosphere before Tuesday at the earliest.

Without the slightest indication of irritation or impatience, although his takeoff has been postponed several times because of the weather, the professor said this morning he would wait three months if necessary to secure perfect conditions to obtain the scientific information he desires.

He said it would be necessary to have the weather favorable over a radius of 450 miles from Zurich.

Japanese and Chinese Co-operate To Administer Relief To 250,000, Including Americans, in Stricken City.

HARRIN, Manchuria, Aug. 10.—(Delayed in Transit)—The European quarter of Harbin was engulfed in floods today, paralyzing business and making it necessary to close the banks. Residents were in consternation.

The water was a yard deep in the offices of the National City bank. All streets were flooded. Instead of ordinary clothing, the people wore bathing suits and used all sorts of makeshift boats, including wooden coffins.

The principal streets were cluttered with stranded automobiles, drozhkihs and rowboats.

Japanese soldiers co-operated with Chinese municipal officials in relief work. The unprecedented floods have been accompanied by cholera, and everyone in the city, including Americans, was receiving inoculation.

Officials estimated 250,000 Chinese and Russians in Harbin were homeless. Japanese troops were posted everywhere to prevent looting.

All north Manchuria is without trains and without mail service. Many Americans are marooned in Manchuria, Harbin, in deep despair.

Destitute Chinese families are reported to be selling female children for $3 each.

The Sungari river continues to rise as a result of renewed heavy rains, and the people of the Sungari valley, suffering from an invasion of war, banditry, famine, cholera and now flood, are in deep despair.

United States Consul General George C. Hanson has formed an international relief commission to appeal for foreign funds to help the hundreds of thousands of homeless.

Signs of Upturn Noted in Britain

LONDON, Aug. 13.—(UP)—In spite of the unfavorable factors of decreased revenue, continuing depression in the heavy industries, more transport competition, and all other ills, British railroading is feeling a former tone with each new day and preparing itself for a lifting of the depression.

A spokesman for the Railway Companies' Association, representing the four big companies in which British railroading is now vested, said that "while the heavy industries such as iron and steel and shipbuilding are still down, and may take some time yet to reach a turning point, there is a marked revival in the railway industry and the whole tone of railroading movement, we feel, is becoming firmer."

Such an observation, in view of the key position of railroading, is considered significant here. No more sensitive barometer of British trade conditions than the railways exist; their business fluctuates either upward or downward with each minute turn in general business conditions. Representing a total investment of $5,500,000, they employ some 600,000 persons, whom they pay $500,000,000 a year. The largest purchasers of iron and steel in the country, they buy 210,000 tons of steel rails alone annually, use 14,500,000 tons of coal and 21,000,000 bricks in the space of a year.

To continue the figures, since they are the best index in the case, the British railways own 66,800 houses and depots at the present time; own 22,000 locomotives, 80 hotels, 155 ships, 45,525 passenger cars, with seats enough for the entire populations of Liverpool, Manchester and Birmingham combined; and 693,134 freight cars.

Attorney-General To Ask Death Penalty For Leaders of Revolt.

MADRID, Spain, Aug. 13.—(AP)—Thousands gathered on a wide promenade in Retiro Park tonight to witness elaborate ceremonies at which President Alcala Zamora conferred honors and cash awards on officials and employees of the republic who distinguished themselves during Wednesday's attempted revolt.

Attorney-General Martinez Aragon, meanwhile, said he would ask for General Jose Sanjurjo and those arrested with him in connection with the revolt the penalty demanded by the military code for officers and men who rebel against the state.

The death penalty is the punishment the code provides in such cases, but the general expectation was that if it were meted out to General Sanjurjo the government would commute it because of his fame as a soldier.

The list of those rewarded was headed by Major Arturo Menendez Lopez, national director of public safety, who received the diploma and grand cross of the order of the republic and by Fernando de la Bodega, mayor of Seville, who received a parchment proclaiming him honorary citizen of the republic.

Madrid was decorated with flags and banners for the occasion. President Alcala Zamora, escorted by the presidential guards, resplendent in full-dress uniforms, was acclaimed by the people. Premier Manuel Azana and members of the cabinet received a share of the applause.

There was a parade of assault guards in trucks and a lengthy military review.

Disillusioned by City Life, Multitudes Swarm Back to Farms—Land Sales So Almost to New Records, As Heroic Drama Unfolds.

New Orleans, Seeking Tourists, New Industry, To Spend $100,000.

BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.

(Copyright, 1932, by the New Orleans Staff.)

NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 13.—This city is preparing to develop new business by following the exact methods of private concerns, and modern channels will be used to "sell the world" about New Orleans. A total of $100,000 will be spent by the Association of Commerce in a five-point program, which touches on virtually every phase of the municipality's life.

Highly trained technicians and business leaders will have charge of this program, and they are going ahead building for prosperity because they have confidence in the future. Approximately $37,000 will be spent in a sales program outside the city, bringing new trade to New Orleans, and the balance will be used in advertising.

The present plan of the association is to spend 60 per cent of this sum in developing New Orleans into a convention city and the remainder in improving port facilities, industry and the domestic area.

Tourist Drive Planned.

Approximately $25,000 has been allotted to the development of "America's most interesting city into the center of the greatest convention center. This sum will be spent by the convention bureau and a tourist development trip is being planned for September when representatives of the bureau will visit 28 cities in an effort to bring additional tourists here.

Next in the five-point plan comes the development of the port, which has assumed new importance with the completion of a federal waterways program. A total of $15,000 will be spent on this phase of the work, and the major portion being used to study the movement of various commodities and to determine why these commodities do not pass through the local port.

Backed by a high-pressure advertising campaign, representatives of the Association of Commerce will visit key cities of the Mississippi valley, urging that shipping be done through New Orleans.

The third objective of the work will be to attract new industries. New Orleans and approximately $10,000 will be spent in an effort to establish direct contacts with executives of industrial groups. This work will be done by the city and special attention will be given to industries for which New Orleans is particularly fitted.

To Develop Resources.

To the woodwork manufacturers the Association of Commerce will point out that New Orleans is the center of one of the finest lumber areas in the world; to chemical concerns the natural resources, including gas, oil and numerous minerals, will be pointed out. Food interests will find that New Orleans offers opportunity in the dairy and sea food lines, while the attention of pulp and paper manufacturers, rubber factories and textile and garment making concerns will be directed to the city's resources.

Work began in 1928 and has proved highly successful, organization officials say.

In the field of agriculture an attempt to increase the buying power of farmers in the New Orleans area will be made, and many thousands of dollars will be spent in this work and in improving the city marketing facilities. The fifth point in the plan will be to build good will in the domestic trade area.

New Orleans is one of the few cities in the country which has continued advertising campaigns in the face of economic stringency. The Association of Commerce feels the contributions of businessmen making possible the continuance of the work are their finest expression of confidence in the city.

Few cities, officials point out, have actively engaged in so many projects and few have combined sales work with advertising.

SPOKANE, Idaho, Aug. 13.—The man of the hour is the man with the hoe.

Thousands of people have gone and are going back to the soil in Washington, Idaho, Montana and Oregon in search of the security that the farm gives.

The federal land bank of Spokane, which operates in these four states, estimates that 50,000 people, since 1920, have left metropolitan cities in search of the security that the farm gives.

In this back-to-land movement there is little migration. People are leaving cities of the northwest to seek the nearest land at hand. There is no mass movement of land settlers from one section of the country to another, as in the case of the pioneer wagon, when the lure of free land brought men and women to the vast acreage of the west.

Now the lure is the security that the farm gives. Nor are people leaving cities of the northwest to seek the nearest land at hand. PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 13.—Rhode Island is organizing the most carefully computed unemployment relief campaign in its history.

Supported by vast amounts of statistics and estimates on the wants of the unemployed next winter, it has been recommended that state agencies build through the medium of localized relief systems a careful, thorough organization designed to spread available money over as much territory as possible and to expend it intelligently and efficiently. A sales tax is being seriously considered to supply the state's share.

Governor Case now has before him for study an exhaustive fact-finding report of his conference on unemployment and relief appointed by him a few months ago to study the situation from all angles. One hundred leaders in financial, civic, social, industrial and community enterprises were enlisted in the conference to work out a systematic approach to a solution of the unemployment relief problem. Working in specialized committees, the conference recently completed the survey, showing that about 97,000 of Rhode Island's working population of 297,000 were unemployed during last April and that about 23,500 heads of families are totally unemployed.

A sub-committee of the conference, headed by Professor James P. Adams, of Brown University, and employing the facilities of the Brown bureau of business research, estimated that the lowest possible cost of caring during the coming year for the needy in the state will be $6,000,000. That will allow for an average family of five persons each week, which the committee pointed out, "may not prevent starvation." However, the committee estimated that the state's income may cost as high as $11,000,000.

Workers in metropolitan Providence are about one-third idle now, it was reported. In Newport county, a report of a fifth of the working population is unemployed, while Bristol county and the Blackstone valley, industrial districts of the state, are four-fifths idle.

Although favorable signs have been apparent in certain localities, the report held no immediate hope of great improvement for the state's industrial base.

Then, too, the smaller or family unit consumes a larger percentage of its production. Thus, with the production diversified and largely concentrated by feeding operations on the farm, the market surplus, particularly of wheat, will tend downward and the price go up.

As to the resettlement of the poorer class of lands, abandoned since homesteaders left, the report held that those returning to the farm are making much better choice as to quality of soil and climatic conditions than the former settlers.

Thus, the man with the hoe would seem once again to take his place against the horizon.

Within Providence, a hopeful sign was seen in a report from Edward J. Reilly, director of public aid, that the department will require about $10,000 less in September than it is spending this month. Largely because 100 men on the aid list recently have received employment.

However, in other cities, notably Pawtucket, the strain on municipal charity has become so severe it has foundered. The city is now on the verge of bankruptcy.

The Babe is the greatest money player in baseball. Not only has he shared in more world series pay checks than any other player, but he has collected more than any other player being a first division player. Some of the series money goes to them. Babe has collected money every year he has been in the league except in 1919 and 1925. He is, incidentally, the only present-day Yankee who took part in all six Huggins' world series. Waite Hoyt, with the Giants, and Bob Meusel, on the Coast, are the only other players who were all six. But they couldn't stay in the Yankee lineup.

"Doc" Frotho, Memphis manager, yesterday replied to published charges of a New Orleans sports writer that he "gave up" the recent series to New Orleans by warming up an outfielder and an infielder to pitch with his club only six runs behind.

"I didn't have any more pitchers to use," he stated. "I had Tangeman, one of the men I had warming up, had pitched and won a 4-0 game for . . . Lake-Barro just before the game, and I thought he might stop this rally."

At the time, Frotho was very short-handed on pitchers. He still is, for that matter, he told The Constitution. "It is the saddest thing the farthest thing from Frotho's mind is "giving up."

"You broke in plaintively, 'I cannot understand why they picked me like that.'"

"You what?" asked Commissioner Landis.

"I cannot understand why the newspaper picked on me like that," I said.

Landis said I did not know what those people look like, where you in that place a bet."

Hornby said he knew of no reason why Bush and the other players had been benched with him in a bet of betting on races.

Bush broke in with "May I ask a question?"

Commissioner Landis assented and continued: "Why was I accused of making bets like that?"

"How do I know why you were accused?" I am telling you about

The two teams will meet in Memphis today, and return to Atlanta Monday for a double-header Monday night. The Crackers won the opening game of the series in 10 innings Friday night.

Bill McGhee, first baseman, was given his outright release by the club Saturday.

Oglethorpe Players To Have 'Laboratory' for Syracuse, Manhattan Games

DR. CUNNINGHAM TO SHOW TEAM NEW YORK CITY

Games, Educational Features Combined; Coach Robertson Expected Soon.

By Jack Troy.

With Harry Robertson, the baron of Buckhead, expected to arrive from the hinterland at any time, the football market of Oglethorpe University is on a decidedly upward trend.

Robertson has been spending the summer in the north and departed by automobile recently for Oglethorpe. He is taking the trip by easy stages, visiting old acquaintances along the way.

The candidates will be called out at Oglethorpe on September 1. The boys will begin their annual pilgrimage to the campus in less than two weeks.

OPEN WITH HOWARD.

The Petrels, according to the schedule arranged last year, will usher in the 1932 Atlanta football season in a night game with Howard College of Birmingham, on September 23, at Spilfield field.

Oglethorpe authorities propose to make this game the second annual bargain game, with admission to be $1. The game also is designed to serve another purpose.

In the event that attendance and interest warrant, it is hoped to install lights at Spilfield field for the purpose of playing other night games in future years.

Oglethorpe will play only two games in Atlanta during the season. After the Howard game, Mercer will be played in the annual Thanksgiving Day feature, November 20, at Spilfield field.

SIX GAMES CARDED.

Six games have been announced on the 1932 schedule, with a seventh pending. Duquesne, Manhattan, Syracuse and Loyola are the other games definitely arranged.

A feature of the 1932 schedule, from the standpoint of the players, will be the New York trip. Both Manhattan and Syracuse will be played on this trip.

Dr. Wallace McCook Cunningham, dean of the school of commerce at Oglethorpe, has been assigned to the team for these games. Dr. Cunningham, who formerly taught in New York, is familiar with the educational features of the game, and will serve both as guide and instructor.

It will be a veritable "laboratory week." The Oglethorpe players will see New York through an experienced observer and will be able to see Wall Street, the libraries and other educational points of interest.

BEST COLLEGE WEEK.

It is planned to make this the best college week of the year for the football players. Dr. Thorne Jacobs, president of Oglethorpe, announced last night.

Chick Meehan, former teammate of Coach Robertson, is coach at Manhattan, while Syracuse is the alma mater of both.

Having lost six varsity men last year and Charley George, a very likely prospect who turned professional to play class baseball this summer, Coach Robertson and Natty Campbell, assistant coach, have a pertinent problem confronting them.

Frank Anderson Jr., Dapper Myers, Lefty Syper, Claude Herrin, ex-Captain Parker Bryant, and Paul Goldsmith are gone. George, regarded as a first-string prospect for end, is also gone.

GOOD PLAYERS.

That leaves such players as Harry Wrens, John Putno, Jack Harrison, Roy Walker, George Gaillard, Luke Moss, Nannie Raines, Sam Baker, Flynn Metrick, Rarkin, and Cobb, backs; Captain-elect, John Patrick, Dan Kenzie, Andy Morrow, Phil Hill-dreth, Rudy Shouse, Wayne Pickard, Don Aderhold, Currie Martin, Thurman, Rainwater, Coffee, Munford, Whitley, Tarantino, Martin, Smith and Chandler, linemen, to carry on.

The makings of a strong team is contained in the group. But the six graduates will be missed. Coaches Robertson and Campbell will have no time to waste before that opening game with Howard.

Bulldogs Busy - - - "Hello, Ripper"

While attending summer classes, some members of the Georgia football squad keep in trim for the coming gridiron campaign. At the left you see Lloyd Gilmore, main full-back, pushing Vase McWhorter, center on the team, round the field in a wheelbarrow while Homer Key is running along for the fun of it. On the right is a well-known figure around the school. It is none other than Jack (The Ripper) Roberts, star of last year's team, shaking hands with Miss Polly Keelyna. Roberts, who will play pro football this season with the Boston team, is visiting in Athens for a few days. Joe Crouch is shown in the center of the group. Special photos.

There Is Good Reason For Fine Mercer Card

Scheduling of Army and Navy in 1933 Means Much to Centennial Program.

By Jimmy Jones.

Lake Russell's plan of pitting his Mercer football team against Army and Navy on successive Saturdays in 1933 has led his coaching brethren in Georgia and the south to wonder at his daring.

Russell, who paid Atlanta a visit during the past week, explained the occasion for assuming such a titanic task. Next year, Mercer University will observe its 100th birthday. The prestige of having two such eleven-a-side football teams on its schedule in the same year means much to the school's centennial program. It isn't that Lake expects to beat either the Army or the Navy, but he will be mightily pleased if his boys acquire themselves with a good education.

During the three years he has held the coaching reins at Mercer, the former University of Tennessee right tackle has turned in one of the finest coaching jobs in the south. His first year, 1929, was a nightmare. Russell found very mediocre material to work with that year. The season of 1930 was a little better. And last year, his team came through with seven victories and only two losses by narrow margins (to Centre, 3-0, and Chattanooga by a touchdown).

While he still has a long way to go, it is easy to say that Russell already has made a success of football at Mercer. Formerly the doormat of even the better S. I. A. A. eleven, Russell now has a team capable of coaching with the better class of conference teams.

OPENS WITH VANDY.

He opens his season this year playing Vanderbilt at Nashville. It will be warm then and Russell cannot hope to match reserves with the Commodores, but modest man that he is, he only figures on doing his best and letting it go at that. He loses but two wins, Lamson, a quarterback, and Hollingsworth, a good blocking half, from his 1931 team. He gets three pretty good sophomore backs in McJung, Norner and Russell. He may shift Joe Popeko, a guard, to a backfield post because of his blocking ability.

Bob Smith, injured last year, will make an effort to regain the center post, but will have a tough time doing so, since Harry Lichner, sophomore, played the position so successfully last year. Russell has "Skeet" Horner, former Tennessee fullback, as his backfield coach. Right now he is looking around for a good man to help him with his line for the first four weeks of the season.

The caliber of Mercer's football schedules is improving from year to year, and it is to be judged by the strenuous program Russell will undertake in '33. Besides Army and Navy, he may take on at least two outstanding southern teams, possibly North Carolina and Georgia.

The alumni have supreme confidence in Russell and have backed his program of athletic solidity. He is easily the most popular coach the Bears have had since Josie Cody and Russ Cohen. Mercer's schedule this year, while compact and including only eight games, represents a rather stirring season of play so far as the Bears are concerned.

It is as follows:

September 24—Vanderbilt at Nashville. October 1—Howard at Macon. October 8—Tennessee at Macon. October 15—Open. October 22—Georgia at Macon. October 29—Stetson at Deland. November 5—Center at Danville. November 12—Chattanooga at Chattanooga. November 24—Oglethorpe at Atlanta.

A COSTLY PUTT.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Tony Scheffer, of Richmond Golf Club, won the city golf championship today when his opponent in the final round, Ewing Pomeroy, 17-year-old caddy at the Shelby park (municipal), missed a 15-inch putt on the 37th hole. Scheffer's card was 5 over par.

ARCHERY TOURNEY.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 13.—(AP)—A. C. Webb Sr., Nashville, president of the Southern Archery Association, announced tonight that the association's fourth annual championship tourney will be held here September 4-5.

BEATS WOODLAWN INCREASES LEAD

Hunt Hurls Well To Blank Pattillo, 8 to 0.

In one of the best games of the day Ousley Chapel defeated Woodlawn Presbyterian, 5 to 3. Carroll held the losers to four hits, while his mates nicked Kingston for 11. This victory gave Ousley Chapel a two-game lead over the field. Barnes, Edge, Cobb and Scott led the victors' attack.

FEES WIN.

Hunt hurled great ball for the Pattillo Memorial and was the big factor in their 5-0 win over Fortified Hills Baptist. This feat earned him the best of the four hits secured by the losers well scattered. Johnson, chief fielder of the winners, hit perfectly on his three trips to the plate. Aubrey hit for the circuit to hold the scoring. Hunt stopped the game in the eighth.

Reduced Fees For Golfers Monday

Reduced green fees and caddy fares for municipal golfers will go into effect Monday and continue through the remainder of the year. The new rates were authorized by the city parks committee at a special called meeting Thursday night.

A rate of 25 cents for two nine-hole rounds of golf on either of the four courses during the week days, with the regular rate of 25 cents for each nine-hole round on Saturday, Sunday and holidays will be the new scale.

The caddy fares have been reduced to 50 cents for the 18 holes and 25 cents for the nine holes, and will go into effect simultaneously with the other reductions.

Reductions in swimming and the shetland pony rides went into effect Saturday and will continue during the remainder of the season.

Five Atlanta Golfers To Compete in National Amateur Qualifying Here Tuesday

YATES TO HEAD ATLANTA STARS AT EAST LAKE

Moore, Hudson, Hughes and Barnes To Participate.

By Roy White.

Six Atlanta amateur golfers, headed by Charlie Yates, Georgia and Atlanta champion, will attempt to qualify Tuesday for the national amateur championship tournament to be played early in September. Five of the city's best, Yates, Berrien Moore Jr., Scott Hudson Jr., Julius Hughes and Tommy Barnes, are entered for the 36-hole sectional eliminations on the No. 2 East Lake course and Dan Sage Jr. of Ansley Park, the sixth Atlanta, is entered from the Cherry Valley Club, at Garden City, N. Y.

In addition to the five Atlantans, a dozen other southern amateurs will attempt to qualify on the East Lake course making it one of the strongest fields ever to be entered from this section.

PERRY ENTERS. Sam Perry, the Birmingham stylist and southern amateur champion, heads the out-of-town entries, which include Jack Toomer, Florida champion, from Jacksonville; Gene Vinson, Mississippi state champion, and Eugene Vincent, also of Mississippi; John Cochran and Billy McWilliams, Rome, Ga.; Dr. George Matthews and J. R. Thomas Jr., Birmingham, Ala.; Judge Brumley, Knoxville, Tenn.; and Woods Beckman, Horace Williams and Ralph Redmond, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Five places have been allotted to this section by the United States Golf Association and with Yates entered from New York, the city has an excellent chance of having at least two and possibly others entered for national competition.

Tuesday's qualifying will be over the 36-hole route on the new course with 18 holes in the morning and another 18 holes during the afternoon.

It will be the first time that the sectional qualifying will be played on the new course and the change was due to repairs being made at numbers 7, 10 and 14 of the old course, which would have made local rules apply on those holes.

COURSE IN SHAPE. The new course is in the best condition of the summer months and with careful cutting and watering of the greens today and Monday, there should be no reason why scores should not be lower than ever before.

Keith Conway, a special representative of the United States Golf Association for the qualifying, and Paul Duke, who handled the Georgia state amateur tournament, will be in charge of Tuesday's qualifying.

Three state champions, Yates, Georgia; Toomer, Florida, and Vinson, Mississippi, together with Perry, the southern titleholder, will be among the 17 entries. McWilliams was the Georgia medalist last year and later won a place in the sectional qualifying, but failed in the final round.

All the other entries have been knocking at the door for several years and any one is likely to crash through Tuesday with a grand 36-hole round. They are all capable golfers.

Tuesday's pairings: Yates, Barnes, Atlanta, and Sam Perry, Birmingham; John Cochran, Rome, and Julius Hughes, Atlanta; Berrien Moore Jr., Atlanta, and Ralph Redmond, St. Petersburg; Eugene Vincent, Jackson, and Charlie Yates, Atlanta; Billy McWilliams, Rome, and Wood Beckman, St. Petersburg; Dr. George Matthews, Birmingham, and Horace Williams, St. Petersburg; Judge Brumley, Knoxville, and Jack Toomer, Jacksonville, and Scott Hudson Jr., Atlanta; Gene Vinson will be paired with one of the two others.

Yates To Play At Lake Sequoyah

TATE, Ga., Aug. 13.—Charlie Yates, Georgia and Atlanta amateur champion, will head a parade of more than 75 golfers who will participate in the mid-summer invitation tournament over the Lake Sequoyah course at the Tate Mountain Estates. The tournament will start Thursday with a qualifying round of 18 holes and will continue during the remainder of the week.

The players will be divided into flights of 16 and there will be as many flights as necessary to take care of every entry. First-round matches will be played Friday morning with quarter-finals started for the afternoon. Semi-finals and finals will be played Saturday.

Robert H. Martin, Atlanta, is chairman of the tournament committee and will be assisted by Willie Livingston, assistant professional at the Capital City Country Club, Atlanta, and C. Arund Thompson.

Entries should be made with Thorpe at 215 Palmer building, Atlanta, prior to Wednesday morning, after which they can be made at the Tate Mountain Estates.

Trophies and prizes for the winners and runners-up in each flight are on display at Myron Freeman & Bros., Peachtree street, Atlanta.

Officials of the Sequoyah course announced today that the course will be open Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday without green fees to tournament entrants.

Y. Jones, T. Jones, F. Jones, Ben Jones, Bat Jones, Ed Gillingham, J. H. Ragwell, Dr. Grady Coker and Mark Sandow from Canton.

Dr. J. P. Turk, J. P. Turk Jr. and James A. Turk from Marietta.

Willford Leach, H. L. Allen and J. P. Furman, of Tate Mountain Estates.

HUNT TO MEET GALLAGHER HERE

Babe Hunt, Ponca City (Okla.), heavyweight, and Marty Gallagher, of Washington, D. C., will fight here Wednesday night, August 31, as principals in the opening show of John S. Bick, making his bow as a boxing promoter in Atlanta. The bout will be staged at the Atlanta auditorium.

The boxing alley manager, who intends this to be the opener of a series of fights he will put on in Atlanta by way of restoring the fight game to prominence here, announced simultaneously that Jay Thomas, well known in fight circles of the nation, would be associated with him as matchmaker.

Thomas, who has been successful in the promotion of amateur boxing at Lakewood park during the summer, no doubt will introduce the same to the boxers he has developed to the professional programs later on, including possibly Earl Dunlap, light-heavyweight from Georgia Tech.

Hunt, a former champion, has acquired a popular attraction as a starter. Hunt made a big hit in the trimming he handed Pietro Corri on his first appearance here and holds decisions over such men as W. L. Strubling, Ernie Schaff, Johnny Risko and Jimmy Braddock.

Gallagher, who boxed the semi-final on the Strubling-Schaff fight at Miami in 1929, has beaten some good heavies himself, including Harold Mayes, of Bayonne, N. J.; Al Friedman and Pietro Corri.

It is Bick's plan to stage a feature boxing attraction here every two weeks during the fall and winter. He believes that only by consistent promoting of high-class shows can boxing be revived permanently. The fight game has always been Bick's hobby, although he is best known as a successful proprietor and builder of bowling alleys.

The semi-final to the card will be announced later.

Ray Moss Signed By Birmingham Club

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Ray Moss, who thus far this season has pitched for Houston, of the Texas league, New Orleans and Memphis of the Southern association, has been signed by the Birmingham club.

Moss has been signed to replace Reg Baker, a lanky rookie.

ALLEN RESTS. Frankie Allen, popular Atlanta fighter, has been ordered by government physicians to retire from the ring for at least a year. Allen was injured while on duty with the 122d infantry at Camp McClelland, Florida, and his manager, Wesley Orr, wishes to correct a statement to the effect that Allen will soon fight again.

The Ingleside Country Club course during the week of August 22 will start Monday and continue during the week.

Every Atlantian who has not passed 16 years, five months and 20 days age, is eligible and invited to participate in the event. They do not have to be members of any private club and municipal players in particular are urged to enter.

Practice will be permitted each morning during the week without green fees, provided the youngsters tee off before noon.

Officials of the Atlanta Golf Association, sponsors of the tournament, stated Saturday that each entry must be at the starting tee at 9 o'clock Monday morning, August 22, for the qualifying round as the pairings will be made at that time.

The players will not have to enter their names prior to the start of the tournament, and entries will be received as long as there is time for 18 holes qualifying to be played before dark Monday.

The entrance fee will be $2 and must be paid at the starting tee before the qualifying round starts.

Jimmy Livingstone, the Ingleside professional, together with Keith Conway and Paul Duke, officials of the Atlanta Golf Association, will be in charge of the tournament.

Y Swimming Meet Set Aug. 27

Annual Y. M. C. A. swimming championships of Georgia will be held at Albany this year, L. H. Cunningham, physical director at the Atlanta Y, announced Saturday.

The event will be held August 27 in the Albany Y. M. C. A. pool, and will be open to every amateur swimmer in the state.

All entries for the meet must be in the hands of H. W. Rhorer, state Y. M. C. A. office, 320 Ten Forsyth street building, Atlanta, not later than August 22.

In the diving contest each contestant will perform four required and five optional dives and the list of optional must be in the hands of C. P. Whiting, Albany Y. M. C. A., at least 48 hours prior to the event.

Scheduled events: 200-yard relay, 100-yard breast stroke, 50-yard free style, 220-yard free style, 100-yard back stroke, 100-yard free style, fancy diving and 150-yard medley relay.

Patchett Leader In Valley League Third Baseman Patchett, of Mobile, continued his heavy hitting during the past week and moved up to second place where he tied Leonard, of Rock Island, for the runner-up position with an average of .341.

Leonard, who was on top a week ago, suffered a setback and was displaced by Cheever, of Keokuk, who moved into first place with a mark of .344, two points under his previous mark. Leonard lost 10 points, while Patchett picked up 6 points.

Other leaders are: O'Dea, Keokuk, .337; Mizner, Cedar Rapids, .332; Pote, Burlington, .327; Schmidt, Rock Island, .325, and Archdeacon, Dubuque, .322.

Patchett increased his lead as a run getter to 74. Leonard increased his lead in hits to 128, while O'Dea went into the lead in total bases with 178, his 119 blows including 27 doubles, 7 triples and 6 homers. Cheever is in front in doubles with 31. Palka, Dubuque-Burlington, Waterloo, leads in triples with 12 and Reider, of Davenport, failed to add to his string of 7 homers. Kerr, of Burlington, continues to blaze the trail for the base stealers with 15 thefts.

Bob McDonald Wins Motorcycle Races THOMASVILLE, Ga., Aug. 13.—Only two men finished the 15-mile event in the motorcycle race card at the Pastime Stables track this week. Bob McDonald, Thomsville's lone entry, flashed across the finish ahead of J. C. Newton, Tallahassee, Florida.

Other entrants were forced out by falls, among them "Shorty" Whiddon, who won last year. Leonard Langston, Tallahassee, won in the stunt event which drew two women riders who gave good performances. Langston also won first place in the ten and five-mile races.

Dameron and Winn On Almond Card John Dameron, Atlanta, will tangle with Hugh Winn, also of Atlanta, in the main attraction of the Almond park wrestling card Wednesday night at 8:15.

Dameron has been appearing frequently on Atlanta's mat cards. Both he and Winn are crafty matmen and as to who will win is a toss-up.

Two local stars will head the one hour semi-windup, with Ted Powell meeting "Red" Powell. Dan Taylor, a newcomer from Newman, is making his second appearance here against Bob Anderson, the Buckhead marvel, in a 10-minute opener.

Bobbitt and Peel Play In Exhibition Match Russell Bobbitt, 13-year-old Atlanta tennis star, will play Dick Peel in an exhibition match at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the Venetian Athletic Club courts. The match will be free to the public.

TOMMY BARNES IS PACE MAKER AT EAST LAKE

Shoots 77 Over New Course; Stars in Qualifying Practice.

Tommy Barnes, the newest member of East Lake's golf circles, "killed two birds with the same strokes" Saturday afternoon while playing over the new course. He set the pace in the qualifying rounds for the annual club championship tournament with a 77 and finished second only to Charlie Yates, in practicing for the sectional elimination qualifying scheduled for Tuesday.

Yates turned in a card of 75 in practicing for Tuesday's play, but will not defend his club championship. He set the pace among the early practice rounds for the sectional qualifying.

Others who took early lead in qualifying for the club championship tournament are George Harris, E. P. Moore, J. H. Starr, E. S. Humphries, Ralph McClelland Jr., M. R. Campbell Jr., Berrien Moore Jr., L. R. Hunter and A. H. (Gus) Monroe.

Members of the East Lake tournament committee announced Saturday that the qualifying for the club championship has been extended another week, in order that every member of the club may have ample opportunity to compete.

The matches will be extended over a period of weeks and handicaps will apply in all flights except the championship, which will be played from scratch.

The players will be grouped into flights of 16 each and one match will be played each week during the completion of the tourney.

Johnson, Arnold In East Lake Finals

T. L. Johnson Jr. and R. O. Arnold entered the finals of the annual East Lake Country Club handicap championship tournament with well-earned victories in the semi-finals during the past week. The finals will be played this week.

Johnson eliminated W. E. McIntosh, 4-3, while Arnold defeated Dr. Green Warren, 4-2, in the championship flight semi-finals.

In the second flight semi-finals, J. F. Stengel eliminated J. A. Whitley, 4-2, and C. A. Williams defeated E. W. O'Brien, 1 up.

W. C. Johnson and Dr. B. E. Sale will meet for the third flight title. Johnson defeated M. E. Flourish, 1 up, and Sale eliminated D. P. Bowen, 1 up, in the semi-finals.

Finals in all three flights will be played over the No. 2 course and handicaps will apply, as they have throughout the first few rounds.

George Fogg Wins First Prize. George Fogg won an ice cream freezer as first prize in the regular weekly blind bogey golf tournament played on the No. 2 East Lake course. Fogg finished in a tie with T. L. Johnson Jr. and Keith Conway with nets of 77, but was out in the draw, leaving Conway and Johnson to share second prize.

There were 43 entries in the event despite threatening weather, and proved one of the most interesting tournaments of recent weeks.

Other low scorers were E. S. Humphries, W. H. Vaughn, E. A. Brooks, John S. Bick, J. A. Dodd, C. D. Guerry and Dr. B. Frank Guy.

Yates, Barnes Set Early Pace. Charlie Yates and Tommy Barnes, youthful members of the East Lake Club, set the pace Saturday afternoon in practicing for the sectional qualifying rounds for the national amateur golf championship, which will be played Tuesday in a 36-hole medal round on the No. 2 East Lake course. Yates turned in a card of 75, while Barnes was two strokes back.

Following closely behind Yates and Barnes were Berrien Moore Jr., a fellow club member, Jack Toomer, Florida state champion from Jacksonville, and Jeff Brumley, from Knoxville, Tenn.

Scott Hudson Jr. will return to the city today from Highlands, N. C., and together with Julius Hughes, another Atlanta entry, will practice this afternoon and Monday.

Practically all the other out-of-town entries are scheduled to arrive during the day.

A 36-hole practice round has been scheduled for Monday for each of the 17 entries from this section.

Semi-Finals Today In Two Tournaments. Semi-final rounds in the annual Piedmont Park Golf Association Club championship tournament will be completed by this afternoon with finals slated to be played next week.

In the championship flight, Mack Wooten plays Duke Turner, Dr. Harry Ridley meets Howard Glenn, E. L. Brooks plays Don Miller and J. P. Webb plays Millard Davis in the quarter finals.

There were 32 players in the championship flight and 16 in all other flights.

Municipal golfers will complete all semi-final rounds today in the Chandler Park course in the Lloyd Cleaners invitation golf tournament.

Finals in the event are slated for next week.

SUTTER, MANGIN IN FINALS TODAY

RYE, N. Y., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Mrs. Elsie Goldsack Pittman, of England, won the women's singles title in the eastern grass court tennis championship today as play in men's singles reached the final round with Cliff Sutter, of New Orleans, and Gregory Mangin, of Newark, the sole survivors.

Mrs. Pittman, playing in excellent form all the way, defeated her countrywoman, Joan Ridley, 6-1, 6-2, in a renewal of their controversial struggle in the final round of this same tournament last year. In 1931 they again met, Sutter, 6-1, 6-3, 6-3.

Sutter, intercollegiate champion, and a tournament sensation this year, outplayed Austin by a wide margin.

He played the last six holes today against Keith Glenn, Santa Barbara, and Henry Culley, Los Angeles.

Wood and Stoen beat Perry and Austin for the title, 6-4, 6-3. Fred Perry, of England, The men's doubles final will pit Sidney B. Wood and Lester Stoen, Los Angeles, against Keith Glenn, Santa Barbara, and Henry Culley, Los Angeles.

Seeks Amateur Place

Dan Sage Jr., youthful member of the Ansley Park Golf Club, who will attempt to qualify Tuesday for the national amateur golf championship, along with five other Atlantans. Sage is entered from the Cherry Valley Club, Garden City, N. Y., and will participate in the Garden City sectional qualifying. He has been visiting in New York for the past two weeks and has played regularly over the Cherry Valley course. Other Atlantans will attempt to qualify at the same time on the No. 2 East Lake course.

Mid-Atlantic Is Led By Rangnow

Rangnow, star catcher of Johnston, was on a batting rampage during the week and closed the gap separating himself and Outfielder Sington, of Beckley, for the leadership among the hitters of the Middle Atlantic league. Rangnow advanced 12 points to 367, while Sington lost seven points, but retained his position at the top with 370. Miller, of Beckley, showed improvement and moved to third place with 358. Other leaders are Boone, Charleston, 351; Rainey, Beckley, 345; Barry, Ck. John, 341; Groseclose, Beckley, 335; Chiozza, Beckley, 334, and Collins, Cumberland, 333.

Sington, the champion home run getter of the league with his 22 four-ply blows, increased his lead in triples to nine and his total bases to 216, in addition to increasing his lead in driving runners home with 87. Thomas of Johnston, is the first player to register 100 runs and he also leads in doubles with 26. Chiozza has made the most hits, 141.

Colored Pro Team Is Practicing Daily The Atlanta Bears, a colored professional football aggregation, is in daily practice on the athletic fields of Washington High school. The team, former football luminary at Clark University, is head coach of the squad and is assisted by Jimmy Hembree, a Clark University undergraduate.

This new organization is anxious to get in touch with other professional teams who would be interested in forming a southern loop, it was stated by the writer and manager, Thomas Wade, who resides at 330 Mitchell street, S. W.

Winter Golf Assured For Fort Lauderdale FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., Aug. 13.—(AP)—Winter golfing was assured for Fort Lauderdale today following a special election yesterday approving the leasing of the city's golf and country club house to Thomas N. Stillwell with 18-month option to purchase for $500,000 in municipal bonds. The new operator plans extensive improvements and will employ between 100 and 200 caddies during the season.

Phelps Shows Way In Central League Phelps, of Youngstown, hitting .385, is the new leader among the hitters of the Central league. The slugging first baseman continued his hitting and was helped along in his climb because of the continued slump in hitting of Outfielder Smith, of Fort Wayne, who dropped 14 points to .373 and slipped down to second place. Sigman, of Fort Wayne, showed improvement and moved to third place with .360, where he is tied with Herchenberger, of Erie. Other leaders are: Cazen, Youngstown, and Combs, Dayton, tied with .355; Felder, South Bend-Dayton, .345; Hader, Erie, and H. Miller, Fort Wayne, tied with .336 and Siebert, Dayton, .331.

P. Young, of Erie, leads as a run getter with 68, but is being pressed by Phelps, who has scored 93 times. Phelps added another homer to his string to bring it to 20. He also took

PURPLE ELEVEN OFF WEDNESDAY FOR GRID CAMP

G. M. A. Candidates To Leave During Week for Hendersonville.

By Roy White.

Two Atlanta prep football teams will start active work for the 1932 campaign during the coming week when Boys' High and Georgia Military Academy candidates leave for two weeks of training in the mountains.

Members of the Boys' High team will leave at noon Wednesday for Magness' fishing camp on the shores of Lake Burton, in north Georgia, while the G. M. A. candidates will leave during the latter part of the week for Hendersonville, N. C., the summer school camp for G. M. A. students.

Coach R. L. (Shorty) Doyal will be in charge of the Purple Hurricane and has arranged a regular schedule of camp activities during the 16-day period at Lake Burton.

O-Kay is by South Mountain Fencer out of Earlowd Welcome. To Alreale fanciers this pedigree reads like the social register, and they claim that a better bred litter of colts has not been whelped in recent years.

Another litter of pups, chow chows, is owned by Mrs. R. C. Hackman. They are sired by Mrs. Hackman's, Claiborne Sun Nee, who is owned by Mrs. R. C. Her puppies are exceptionally well-bred and are very handsome, commencing to develop the much-to-be-desired scowl that is characteristic of the better chows.

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Laughridge, who introduced Schnauze's to Atlanta some years ago, have recently disposed of another litter. The Schnauzer breed in Atlanta and this section is becoming more popular each year.

Bill Kaliska, 105 Ponce de Leon Avenue, has a Schnauzer pup which has wrecked a dozen or so pairs of house slippers and a few rugs. "I can't spank him because he looks so comical when I yell at him," said Kaliska.

There is no dog in Atlanta which rules the house as does Kaliska's 'Weasel.' —

The writer owns a Schnauzer which has a most amazing variety of likes and dislikes as to food. Bananas are a favorite with him. Watermelon, cantaloupe, oranges and grapes are also greedily con-

A setter pup which was recently sent away for training, also had an accommodating appetite which included a liking for all the above-mentioned foods as well as apples. The setter regarded all food as good and never even nosed it for a distinguishing odor. She simply opened her mouth and ate.

COUNCIL EXPECTS ACTIVE SESSION

Several Controversial Questions To Come Up for Consideration.

As council Monday faced a fight over several controversial matters, including a proposal for establishment of a budget commission, sponsored jointly by Alderman G. Everett Millican and Alvin L. Richards, an audit of the city's financial affairs, and a proposal for the establishment of a municipal auditor, the session was expected to be one of the most active of the year.

The report of the auditor, filed in the city clerk's office, is based on the municipality as of December 31, 1931. It showed a deficit, however, in ready cash of $1,322,000.88, which did not credit the city with $900,000 in outstanding bills at that time. The school deficit was listed at $200,000. The largest single item of indebtedness of the city was $14,021,596.52 in outstanding bonds.

Millican will wage a fight to abrogate a recently voted milk bottle ordinance despite a unanimous adverse report of the sanitary committee on the measure.

The budget plan contemplates that the mayor, city comptroller, senior tax assessor and chairman of the finance committee shall constitute the budget commission. Millican will offer it at a meeting of the finance committee at 12:30 o'clock Monday afternoon. Council meets at 2 o'clock.

Council also will be called upon to pass on recommendations that pensions be given Miss Cornelia Agnes Orr, teacher; J. F. Lord, engineer at the waterworks; Charles C. Holt, water department foreman; and Mrs. George Smith, widow of a former employee of the construction department.

Alderman Millican is to be the center of another fight when he attempts to override an adverse report of the sanitary committee to a proposal to repeal an ordinance forcing milk dealers to distribute products in containers bearing the distributors' names and setting up a bottle exchange.

He also will offer a measure asking the Georgia legislature to empower recorders' courts to try liquor cases, impose fines and turn the money into various city coffers to bolster receipts of municipalities of the state "and to give better enforcement. He estimates that between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 would accrue to Atlanta under the plan.

Councilman H. Paris Rusk, of the thirteenth ward, will lead a fight to force adoption of an ordinance to bar married women whose husbands are gainfully employed from remaining on city pay rolls. The measure will face council with a unanimous adverse report of the ordinance committee.

An ordinance requiring those engaging in the plumbing and electrical examinations will reach council with a favorable recommendation of the ordinance committee. A compromise has been reached which entitles an applicant to an examination within 48 hours after the demand is formally filed, grants an appeal to the mayor and council from the examining board, and exempts those who have done plumbing work which has passed city inspections from the examination.

Another ordinance affecting peddling of coal will be considered, its chief provision being that a peddler may distribute in any amounts he pleases but that he must have the approval of the city inspector of weights and measures that the retainers he uses holds the amount of coal he claims for them.

A move to obtain $1,200 for a hangar at Tech High school will be made by Councilman Joseph E. Berman, chairman of the aviation committee, of council. Berman says the school now has about $40,000 worth of equipment and that the hangar would enable a thorough ground training.

The school would be accredited by the United States department of education, if it were so equipped, and would be the only high school to hold such a rating in the southeast, Berman explained. He hopes to get $100 from the streets ordinary fund of the 13 wards to make up the necessary money.

TWO MEN ARE JAILED IN PROBE OF ROBBERY

Charlie Rooper and Oscar Morgan, negroes, were held by police Saturday on suspicion following the robbery of the store of Alex Aronoff, 296 Ashby, S. W. Rooper was found hiding under the store, and Morgan was arrested on information supplied by Rooper, police said.

John Patterson, 33, of a Fair street address, who was arrested Friday night following the burglary of the Colonial Dry Cleaners' shop, at 314 Capitol avenue, Saturday was bound over to the grand jury under $10,000 bond.

WOMAN IS KILLED IN PARACHUTE JUMP

DELPHI, Ind., Aug. 12.—(AP)—Mrs. Ruth Huggins, 39, of Indianapolis, was killed here this afternoon when her parachute failed to open after a drop from a balloon. The balloon ascension was part of an old settlers' picnic.

Named To Faculty

Dr. Harvey C. Brown, who completed his theological education at Emory University in 1920, when he received his bachelor's degree in the school of divinity, has been called to the school of Bible and religious education at Woman's College, Monticello, Ala. It was announced by President Walter D. Agnew Saturday. Dr. Brown, a native of Camp Hill, Ala., has been director of the school of religious education at Knoxville, Tenn., for the last six years. He will assume his duties on September 13.

Stick-To-It-Ativeness And Common Sense Bring Prizes

$1,800 in Cash Prizes Will Go to Readers Who Keep Plugging Along; Book Has All Correct Answers.

BY THE SONGAME EDITOR.

Already the Songame is nearing its home port, where prizes amounting to $1,800 await readers who find the most correct song titles for the series of 80 pictures. At this point the conductor of this interesting feature would like to preach a sermonette on the subject of stick-to-it-ativeness. Will you bear with him? Thank you! Well, here it is: The 40 winners, who will be handed awards ranging up to $1,000, are certain to be those who aren't easily discouraged. So, if one or more "hard" pictures have you stumped, don't be faint-hearted! Just plug merrily ahead, remembering that the rules do not require that all of the answers be found. Common sense and determination applied to the Songame will pay handsome dividends.

Readers who have encountered difficulty in finding appropriate song titles for any of the pictures of the series should be sure to consult the helpful list of songs, which may be had free by calling at the circulation department, or by mail, for a 2-cent stamp. This list has the answers for the first 35 pictures, and for many others of the series.

Another aid is "Songs We All Love," the reference work from which the artist selected all of the song titles to be illustrated by the Songame series. This book was made available recently at the suggestion of a number of contestants who wanted a new source from which to obtain all solutions. "Songs We All Love," which may be ordered through The Constitution, is 50 cents a copy—at circulation department, or 54 cents by mail.

Many prizes in The Constitution's Songame seem certain to be won by readers who never before have been liberally paid for contesting, and who have never heretofore been considered "lucky."

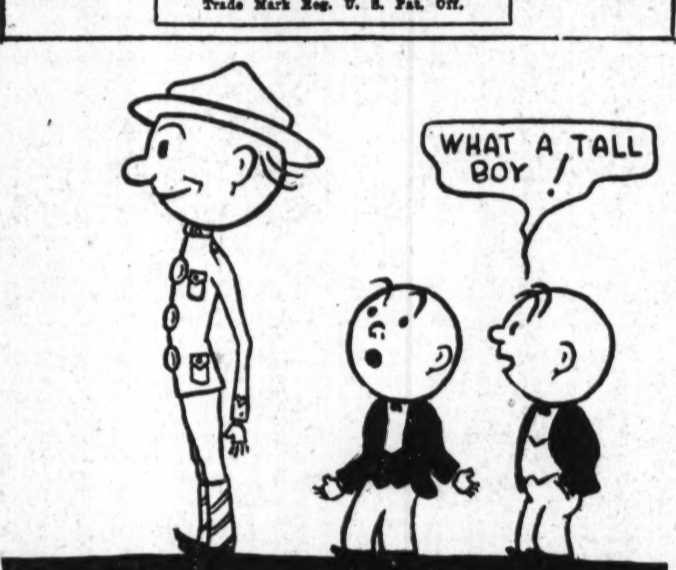

Contestants who are in doubt about any of their answers are permitted to submit as many sets as they please, changing their solutions at will. Those who decide on second or additional sets can easily obtain duplicate pictures at The Constitution circulation department. Pictures Nos. 1 to 15 are free, while pictures from No. 16 up are the same price as the individual copies of The Constitution in which they were published—that is, 5 cents apiece. Any 8 back pictures can be had for 30 cents, while the pictures from No. 1 to No. 40, inclusive, can be had for $1.25. Mail orders for duplicate pictures should be accompanied by 2 cents additional for postage.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Two Weeks Given.
Q. I wish to ask if residents outside of Atlanta will be given extra time to submit their answers, after September 5.—W. L. B., Jefferson, Ga.

A. Songame players will be given two weeks, after the publication of the last picture on September 5, in which to bring or send in their sets. The final deadline is not until midnight, Monday, September 19.

Cheer Up and Tune in the SONGAME. Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Don't let these pictures "stump" you. If you can't recall the title answers that fit them, or any of the other pictures of the series, be sure to obtain a copy of the valuable and helpful list of songs offered free to Constitution readers. A copy of this interesting list may be had by calling at the circulation department, or by mail for a 2-cent stamp.

$1,800 in cash will be awarded prize is $1,000; the fourth, $50, and the fifth, $25. There are ten prizes of $10 each, and twenty-five prizes of $5 each.

There is no red tape. It is not necessary to get subscriptions in order to qualify for any of the prizes, nor is it necessary to register. Non-subscribers have the same opportunity to win one of the forty prizes as subscribers. There will be no tie-breaking series of pictures to solve, or extra work of any kind to do. The correct answers are what count.

The Songame pictures and answers are not to be submitted until all of the pictures have been published. Then they are to be brought or sent in at one time, as a set.

Advertising Head

J. B. Allen, who was connected with the Macon Telegraph for 14 years, and who has been made advertising manager of A. G. Rhodes & Son, Rhodes Purdie, of that organization, announced on Saturday.

F. WEBER'S WORK WILL BE DISPLAYED AT HIGH MUSEUM

Despite the delay in arrival of a collection of etchings and engravings by Frederick Weber, New York artist, L. P. Skidmore, director of the High Museum of Art, said Saturday he hopes to be in position to open the exhibition Monday. The showing was originally scheduled to begin today, but delay of shipment from Winthrop College, in South Carolina, where the work has been on display, caused the time to be set ahead.

Today will mark the end of the exhibition of paintings by Miss Mary Hutchinson, Atlanta girl, whose work during the last 30 days has attracted unusual attention. The display of woodwork engravings by Miss Georgia Greene, of Atlanta, will continue for two weeks longer, Mr. Skidmore said.

Commenting on the attendance at the museum this summer, Mr. Skidmore said that despite the fact that this time of year is regarded as the slack season in art circles, attendance at the museum has exceeded that of many winter months. He said that awakened interest on the part of art patrons and co-operative publicity had drawn the crowds.

This afternoon the museum staff will be host to members of the Studio Club who will attend in a body between 4 and 5 o'clock. Invitations erroneously set the time for the visit as Saturday afternoon.

ARMY BUYS 1,000 G.E. HOTPOINT RANGES

The W. D. Alexander Company, Georgia distributors, announced on Saturday that the army had bought 1,000 G. E. Hotpoint ranges from the Edison General Electric Appliance Company.

Shipments will go ahead at once, the largest number going to Brooklyn, Mr. Alexander said. Smaller quantities are being sent to other depots, he said.

THE CONSTITUTION'S FREE COOKING SCHOOL

TUESDAY August 16 WEDNESDAY August 17 THURSDAY August 18 FRIDAY August 19

KEITH'S GEORGIA THEATRE

Mrs. Kate Stafford in charge

IF YOU ever lived in Atlanta, you'll remember those popular programs that brought good music, real plays and entertaining lectures to town—the annual Chautauqua.

This newspaper brings you a new sort of Chautauqua this year—the "Kitchen Chautauqua." The Kitchen Chautauqua is for your enjoyment—programs concerning the fine and honest tasks of broiling a steak and icing a cake, and of saving kitchen minutes for use in more recreational pursuits.

The theme of the Kitchen Chautauqua is the "happy kitchen—1932 style," where there's a frying pan and a double boiler there can be fun and enjoyment. The Kitchen Chautauqua will find it for you... show you innumerable new ways in which to increase your store of romance in the kitchen—magic methods to squeeze hurry-up meals fit for a king out of an almost empty refrigerator and a dash of versatility... and furnish you a whole batch of practical delicious recipes at the same time.

We have made every preparation for the Kitchen Chautauqua—and remember, it's your cooking school. We know you'll enjoy it... that's why we arranged to bring it to you. We invite you to reserve each one of the days—NOW.

Every woman of this city will be entertained and helped by these fascinating talks. They deal with every phase of home interest. They are given you free!

BY JOHN L. COOLEY.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—(P)—The stock market was turned up considerably today as conflicting cross-currents swept over it, stocks ending the day off a fraction on the average. Some leading issues lost 1 to 2 points while a few registered slight gains.

Trading was fairly active for a half-day session, the turnover reaching 1,750,000 shares, which, however, was nearly 1,000,000 short of the previous Saturday. The market was a selling order fell on the market in the first half hour of trading and stocks slipped 1 to 5 points. Later, however, buying cleared the main body of stocks forward.

Today's buying apparently represented new purchases by bullish investors who had missed the previous rally and short sellers who were in the market on Friday.

The bond market reacted after a week of steady advance and this may have imparted fresh momentum to the selling of stocks. The commodity markets pursued a somewhat mixed course.

Foreign exchanges were firm. Fresh interest in exchange rates has been manifested by bankers. Approximately $100,000,000 of gold, it was computed today, has flowed back to America since June 15 and on Monday a substantial advance is expected incident to the plans of the Federal Reserve Board to increase the gold stock.

The weekly trade reviews sounded a somewhat more cheerful note. While no important reflection of better industrial feeling was reflected in the heavy industrial aside from a somewhat firm tendency for scrap iron, a fairly substantial increase in movement of some textile lines was reported. This was particularly noticeable in the reviews of cotton and wool. The weekly report of freight car loadings showed a reduction of 14,654 cars from the previous week, while the active stocks which, after yielding 1 to 5 points in the early trading, bounded back to a level where they ended the day about a point lower were seen to show a sharp recovery.

Among the active stocks, General Motors, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific, United States Steel, Du Pont and Pennsylvania, among others, showed a 2 points recovery in their loss. Small gains were registered by American Smelting, Anaconda, American and Foreign Power, Bethlehem Steel, Consolidated Refining, Corn Products, Consolidated Gas, Stone and Webster and Westinghouse.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—(P)—Although seasonal demand for steel products tapered off and production came a point to about 14 per cent of prior capacity, the Steel Trust remained hopeful that improvement would develop in September.

Expectations for improvement were said to be based on impending orders from railroads and for structural projects. While finished steel prices held unchanged, the tone was aided by higher scrap quotations, and moderate improved demand for pig iron was reported in some districts while others were quiet, with prices unchanged.

Copper held steady, with moderate quantities of near-by metal still available at 53.8 cents for electrolytic delivered.

Zinc was firmer and although buying tapered off somewhat as the market advanced, sellers held firm.

Lead held firm at the recent advance. Zinc held steady, buying was moderate.

Antimony was steady, although recent advances failed to attract better demand.

Miss Connelly Weds Bert Marr, of Conn.

The marriage of Miss Irene Connelly and Bert L. Marr, of New Haven, Conn., was solemnized Wednesday afternoon at 5 o'clock at St. Philip's cathedral. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Woolsey E. Conch, in the presence of the immediate relatives and a few close friends.

The bride was gowned in old ivory satin, cut on bias lines and featuring the V-shaped neckline, with yoke and sleeves of angel-skin lace. The sleeves were close-fitting and ended in points over the hands. Her bouquet was of white bride's roses and swansons, tied with ivory-colored ribbon.

The bride's only attendant was her sister, Mrs. A. J. Daniel, of Dublin, Ga., who wore pink organdy with accessories to match. She wore a shoulder bouquet of sweetheart roses and swansons.

Thomas B. Chadwick, of Atlanta, was best man. Following the ceremony a bridal supper was given at the Henry Grand hotel. Mr. Marr and his bride left for an extended tour through the southern and New England states and will return to Atlanta late in November.

Miss Skelton Weds Woodrow E. Anthony.

ELBERTON, Ga., Aug. 13.—A marriage of cordial interest to a wide circle of friends was that of Miss Mary Elizabeth Skelton, of Canons, to Woodrow Elbert Anthony, of Danielsville, which was solemnized Thursday, August 11, at 4 o'clock at the First Methodist parsonage in Elberton. Rev. J. W. O. McKibben, brother-in-law of the groom, officiating. The impressive ring ceremony was read in the presence of members of both families and a few close friends.

The attractive bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Skelton, of Canons, was becomingly attired in lovely fall model of brown crepe with harmonizing trimmings. She wore a smart close-fitting hat of brown felt and her other accessories were the matching shades. A shoulder bouquet of sweetheart roses showered with valley lilies completed her costume.

After the ceremony an informal reception was held. The lovely home was artistically decorated in ferns and pink gladioli. Those assisting Mrs. McKibben in entertaining were: Mrs. B. F. Anthony, Mrs. Branson James and Mrs. W. C. Harris.

Mr. and Mrs. Anthony left immediately after the reception for a wedding trip through the mountains of north Georgia and North Carolina. Upon their return they will be at home at Elberton, near Danielsville, the country home of the groom's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Anthony.

Miss Rathbun and Mr. Bucknell, Former Atlantans, Will Wed

NEW YORK, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Of social importance throughout the south and east is the announcement made by Mr. and Mrs. Edward Harris Rathbun, of Woonsocket, R. I., of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Anita Reed Rathbun, to William Harlan Bucknell, son of Dr. and Mrs. Howard Bucknell, of Atlanta, Ga., and grandson of the late William Bucknell, founder of Bucknell University at Lewisburg, Pa. Miss Rathbun and Mr. Bucknell are members of distinguished families and their forebears were numbered among the aristocratic pioneers of this country.

Miss Rathbun is a graduate of Mills College in California and of the Cambridge School of Domestic Architecture and Landscape Architure in Cambridge, Mass. She has been actively engaged in her profession for the last two years in New York city.

Mr. Bucknell is a graduate of the Georgia School of Technology and a prominent member of the Phi Kappa fraternity. His mother was before her marriage Miss Susie Cunningham, of Atlanta, Ga., a southern belle and beauty and a representative of a family whose members were leaders in the south. The bridegroom-to-be is a brother of Mrs. Dixon Potter, of New York, the former Miss Sue Bucknell, of Atlanta, and Howard Bucknell, who is in the United States consular service.

Mr. Bucknell holds a responsible position in New York city as operating manager with the firm of Albert B. Ashforth, Inc.

Mrs. Tufts Speaks To Canary Club

Mrs. Arthur Tufts, prominent member of the Atlanta Bird Club, was the guest speaker of the Canary and Flower Club at its meeting held at the home of Mrs. Ellis Terry on Shadow-lawn, avenue, with Mrs. S. P. Booth as joint hostess. Mrs. Tufts spoke on "Southern Birds." Mrs. Lawrence McCord, president, presided over the business session, after which an interesting program was presented. Mrs. Henry Atkins spoke on Japanese iris and Mrs. J. C. Allen read an interesting paper on the bluebird.

Beautiful flowers were entered for judging by the club members. Mrs. Alva D. Kiser won the prize for artistic arrangement and unusual specimen with a silver vase of hardy tuberoses, arrowhead, verbenas and ageratum. Mrs. S. P. Booth won honorable mention with red verbenas displayed in a black bowl.

Mrs. S. C. Sheehan was received as a new member into the club. Members were invited by the hostess to view her lovely grounds. Refreshments were served under oak trees, where azaleas, rhododendrons and long-ra formed a background of unusual beauty.

Miss Sara White Weds Mr. Hood.

MAYSVILLE, Ga., Aug. 13.—A marriage of interest to a wide circle of friends was that of Miss Sara White and William E. Hood, which was solemnized August 7 at the home of the bride's parents. The ceremony was performed only in the presence of the immediate family. Rev. W. H. Parks officiating.

The bride wore a gown of navy blue crepe with accessories to match. She is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. M. White, of Maysville, Ga. For the past two years she has been teaching in north Georgia.

Mr. Hood is the son of Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Hood, of Nacoochee, Ga. For the past several years he has been in the mercantile business. Following the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Hood left immediately by motor for St. Simons Island, and on their return they will make their home in Gainesville, Ga.

Miss Redd Weds R. M. Towery.

Of interest to a wide circle of friends and relatives throughout Georgia and Tennessee is the announcement of the marriage of Miss Margaret Redd, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Redd, and Raymond Mizell Towery, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam L. Towery, which was solemnized at the home of the Rev. J. F. Edens Sunday, August 7. The bride is a popular member of the younger set, her charming personality and beauty attracting for her a host of friends. She was runner-up to "Miss Georgia" last year and to "Miss Atlanta" this year in the popular beauty parades. She received her education in Georgia schools and is a descendant of the pioneer Hawkins and Redd families of north Georgia. She is the great-granddaughter of the late Dr. F. M. Hawkins, beloved evangelist, of Cumming, Ga., and granddaughter of the late John L. Redd, noted financier of Cherokee and Bartow counties. He was also at one time benefactor of Reinhardt College, where Mrs. Towery received part of her education.

The bridegroom attended school at Tech and Marist Colleges, in Atlanta, and has a host of friends among the younger set. He has gained marked prominence in athletic circles throughout Georgia, having participated in all fields of sport. He is a member of prominent Tennessee families, being the grandson of the late W. V. Towery, of Knoxville, Tenn., and Cincinnati, Ohio, a beloved veteran of the Confederate army.

Mr. and Mrs. Towery will be at home after September 1 at 863 Cherokee avenue, south.

West End Club Meeting Featured by Literary Program

West End Woman's Club opened its meeting last Wednesday with "My Georgia Land," the adopted state song of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs. After regular business session, the club voted to rent the clubhouse for political meetings to a reliable candidate, with the understanding that the club officially will not sponsor the candidacy of any one person. An entertaining and instructive literary program followed, conducted by Mrs. J. J. Edwards, chairman of this department, with Mrs. O. A. Harbin as co-chairman; Mrs. Luther Still, secretary; Mrs. L. H. Caveny, treasurer, and Mrs. W. G. Baskin, membership chairman.

Mrs. D. P. Murphy spoke on "What Club Women Should Know and Do." Mrs. G. C. Barrow and Mrs. C. W. Wheeler talked interestingly on the United States' outlying possessions, including Alaska, Philippines, Porto Rico, Hawaii, Samoa, Guam and Virgin Isles. Mrs. O. A. Harbin spoke on her favorite authors and books. Mrs. T. J. Middlebrooks read a poem of the popular writer, Edgar Guest, and current events followed by Mrs. W. G. Baskin. The next literary meeting will be held the second Wednesday in September. Square dances are still enjoyed each Saturday evening.

Visitors Honored.

Miss Eleanor Fike entertained at an informal dance last Thursday evening at her home on Virginia avenue, in honor of her guests, Misses Helen Brownlow and Margaret Maney, of Knoxville, Tenn., the guests including 50 members of the younger set.

Miss Marie Rice was hostess yesterday at a bridge-luncheon at her home on Virginia avenue, in compliment to these visitors. Mrs. Calvin Stewart entertained at luncheon Friday at her home on Peachtree road, in honor of Misses Brownlow and Maney.

German-American Club To Stage Colorful Gypsy Carnival August 18

Among the most interesting social events planned for this week is the gypsy carnival to be given by the local German-American Club, in the picturesque garden adjoining the clubhouse of this organization at 80 Fourteenth street, N. E., Thursday evening, August 18. A feature of this colorful occasion will be a mock gypsy wedding, the principal characters to wear bright colored costumes. Miss Eugenia Buchanan, gifted musician, and the German club choir will render a program of gypsy songs. The garden will be transformed to represent a gypsy camp and in the evening a Hungarian menu will be served. A number of gypsy dances will be presented in which many of the guests will participate. Members of the club are requested to wear gypsy costumes and jewelry. The public is invited to attend this novel occasion and tickets may be secured from the German-American Club or any member of the club.

The German-American Club is composed of 70 prominent Atlantans and is numbered among this city's most important educational, cultural and social organizations. Officers of the club are: H. F. Linder, president; Dr. Theo Toepel, vice president; W. H. Thones, treasurer; Miss Anita Yancey, secretary. Directors of the board are: Professor H. T. Gaertner, Professor C. F. Hamff, Robert Hecht, L. S. Frankman, A. S. Huth, J. Kurt Holland, Emil Heege, W. Heider and Otto Klingenberg.

Another affair planned by the German-American Club for August is the bridge party to be given Wednesday evening, August 24, at the clubhouse. Reservations for this affair can be made by telephoning Mrs. H. F. Linder, Walnut 4733.

Fulton Chapter Honors Veterans.

Mrs. Frank Golden and G. J. McCurry, chairmen of the Soldiers' Home Committee of Fulton chapter, United Daughters of Confederacy, entertained the veterans of the Soldiers' Home and Fulton county and 27 of Miss Dolie Harrison's "daughters" from the Old Ladies' Home in West End, and other distinguished guests at a watermelon cutting at the Soldiers' Home Tuesday afternoon. Colonel Bob Lee Avery made an interesting talk and Chaplain Henderson, of Camp No. 150, told several amusing anecdotes of a fine type of humor well known a generation ago.

After the watermelon was served by a bevy of girls the veterans and their friends danced to the strains of old time "breakdown" music rendered by Fiddlin' John Carson.

Another interesting event of the afternoon was a visit through the different departments of the home and grounds at the invitation of Dr. Patton, the new superintendent.

Mrs. Heery Entertains Grant Park Club.

Mrs. C. W. Heery, president of the Grant Park Woman's Club, entertained the executive board Thursday afternoon at her home on Park avenue, S. E., being the first series of vanishing teas sponsored by the Grant Park Woman's Club.

The executive board consist of 16 members, and they planned the second series of entertainments to carry on the work in the near future. Mrs. Heery's tea took the form of an official tea and a musical program was arranged by the hostess.

A picnic supper and swim at Grant park will be enjoyed by the members of Grant Park Woman's Club Friday evening, August 17, in lieu of the regular club meeting. A band consisting of five pieces will furnish the music. Supper will be served at 7 o'clock in the pavilion, afterwards games will be played and an old-fashioned square dance will be staged.

Camp Fire Girls To Spend Week-End At Wohelo Cabin

Camp Fire Girls are anticipating with a great deal of pleasure week-ends spent this fall at Wohelo Cabin, the cabin owned by the Atlanta Woman's Club at Avondale Estates. Permission has been granted for any Camp Fire group to use this cabin whenever desired, provided reservations are made in advance through the Camp Fire office. Several groups have already signed up for the cabin and it is hoped that every group in the Atlanta council will take advantage of this offer.

Mrs. Laura V. Lombard, executive secretary, and Miss Eleanor Davis, field worker of Atlanta Camp Fire Girls, will return Monday from a ten weeks' stay at Camp Toccoa, where they have just closed a very successful season. Mrs. Lombard will continue the work of the city summer program, which has been in charge of Mrs. Millard Beals during Mrs. Lombard's absence at camp. Activities will take place as scheduled until September 7, when the fall membership drive will begin. A special class in headband weaving and designing will be held Tuesday morning, August 16, at 10:30 o'clock at Camp Fire headquarters. Some lovely headbands have been made this summer and the best will be entered in an exhibit to be held in September.

Board of directors of Camp Fire Girls will meet Wednesday, August 17, at 12:30 o'clock at the Piedmont hotel. This meeting is especially important as plans for the fall work will be discussed.

Matrons' Club Picnic.

The 1930 Matrons' Club will have a picnic near the home of Mrs. C. C. Berry, Venetian drive, Cascade Heights, August 20, at 2 o'clock. Matrons and honorary members are invited the bring families. For information telephone Mrs. A. B. Coley at Main 7437.

VOGUE SAYS:

"Found your Fall wardrobe robe on a good Wool Dress"

WOOL DRESS

Because woolens are such enchanting things this year the designers have devoted more than half of their early showings to them. They are in two versions; one almost as thin and sheer as the organdies you danced in this summer—the other the slightly "fuzzy" Ostrich cloth and Rabbit's hair. But we haven't stopped with woolens in our autumn collection... we've the new Crinkle Crepes and puffy-surfaced Satins that look as if they might have been blistered, and a few Velvets—with more to come. For details there are higher necklines and a multitude of capelets and buttons and amusing sleeves... and these delectable colors:

Rhum brown, Vineyard wines, Avocado green, and Black!

Miss Woods Will Wed Mr. Wilkins

LONG BEACH, Cal., Aug. 13.—Widespread interest is centered in the announcement of the wedding plans of Miss Marjorie Ellen Woods, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Woods, of Long Beach, and John J. Wilkins Jr., of Athens, Ga. The wedding will take place at All Saints Episcopal church in Long Beach Wednesday evening, August 24, at 7 o'clock. Rev. F. Augustus Martyr will perform the ceremony in the presence of a fashionable gathering of relatives and friends.

Miss Evelyn Atkins has been chosen to act as maid of honor, and the trio of bridesmaids will include Misses Edith Boot, of Hollywood, Cal., and Jean Gebalt, of Los Gatos, Cal., cousins of the bride-elect, and Alice Krick, James White, of Athens, will attend Mr. Wilkins as best man. Mr. White, accompanied by his wife, have sailed from New York city aboard the S. S. Pennsylvania for California. Mr. Wilkins left today for Long Beach.

Miss Woods is being entertained at a series of social events preceding her marriage and Mr. Wilkins will share honors at a number of these affairs after his arrival in California. Gamma Phi Beta Alumnae Club recently honored Miss Woods at a shower and bridge party at the home of Miss Mildred Miller, with Miss Hazel Tilson as assistant hostess. Also honor guests were Mrs. Clarence Edmondson, wife of Coach "Heck" Edmondson, of the University of Washington, who is here with his athletes for the Olympic games and who represented the United States as a sprinter in the Swedish Olympiad, and Mrs. John Kostack, who with her husband, dean of letters and sciences at the University of Idaho, is visiting in Long Beach. The trio of honor guests were Gamma Phi Betas at the University of Idaho.

Following their marriage Mr. Wilkins and his bride will enjoy a trip of several weeks before returning to Athens, Ga., where they will reside.

Mrs. Lee Arrives In Atlanta For Residence

Mrs. Blewett Lee is receiving an ovation from her loyal and devoted friends since her recent return to Atlanta from residence in New York city. It was 15 years ago that the former Mrs. Delia Foreacre Sneed became Mrs. Blewett Lee, her marriage taking her to New York city for residence, thereby causing the removal of one of the most cultured and charming women it has been Atlanta's fortune to claim. Her husband, Blewett Lee, son of the distinguished Confederate officer and educator, General Stephen D. Lee, was a prominent member of the New York bar, having lived in the metropolis since his graduation from Harvard College.

Mrs. Lee returned to Georgia for occasional visits, always spending several weeks in Atlanta, and she visited her sister, Mrs. A. P. Brantley, in Blackshear, ever so often. It was several months ago that Mr. and Mrs. Lee reached the decision to come here and establish their permanent home, giving as one of their main reasons that they could live in Atlanta the year round because of its marvelous climate. Mrs. Lee is an ardent horticulturist and she is planning a charming garden on the 155-ft. frontage of her attractive lot on Peachtree Battle avenue. This is another good reason why she desired to live in the Gate City of the South.

They purchased the attractive residence at 355 Peachtree Battle avenue, which they will occupy just as soon as there is a little remodeling. Mr. Lee's collection of books is so valuable and so large, that a library of generous proportions must be built to accommodate the marvelous tomes he owns. In October, they will be joined by their son, Percival Sneed, whose health has been fully restored at Saranac Lake, N. Y.

Mr. Lee will join Mrs. Lee at a very early date, having been detained in New York city by business affairs, which he hopes to conclude this week. He is enthusiastic over returning to the south as is Mrs. Lee, and looks forward with unusual interest in becoming a citizen of Atlanta. Mr. and Mrs. Lee are world-wide travelers and are brilliant conversationalists as well, and will be welcomed as prominent acquisitions to social circles.

When popular Miss Gertrude Snider married the late Colonel Leverett Walker, U. S. A., at a brilliant ceremony in Macon, one of her bridesmaids was Mrs. Lee. Mrs. Walker gained fame and attention for being Fort McPherson's first bride. The summer of 1932 finds Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Lee residing at the Georgian Terrace, renewing the happy experiences of their girlhood days and enjoying the pleasure of one another's congenial companionship.

VILLA SERENA, the beautiful estate of Mr. and Mrs. Lindsey Hopkins on Pace's Ferry road, is the daily gathering place for members of society who assemble to enjoy a plunge in the picturesque swimming pool, a game of tennis, or a tea party on the terrace of the lovely home. Miss Sara Hopkins, sub-deb daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins, is pictured with a trio of her friends, and Mrs. Lindsey Hopkins Jr., with an equal number of young matrons. Some are lounging in smart pajama ensembles following a swim, some resting after a swift game of tennis, and others sipping iced tea on the cool tiled terrace. 100-Year-Old Cradle Awaits Robert Lewis

An adorable old-fashioned cradle, over a hundred years old, awaits the arrival from Piedmont hospital of tiny Robert Bee Lewis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Barnard Bee

Lewis Jr., who was born Friday, August 5. Intricate hand carving ornaments the fine walnut of which the baby bed is fashioned and the rockers raise the cradle high from the floor to be of a height with the high four-poster beds of by-gone days. This cradle was made from the wood of a walnut tree grown on the South Carolina plantation of the baby's great-grandparents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Fielding Lewis, and was first used for their eldest child, later cradling the brothers and sisters of small Robert Lewis' grandfather, Barnard Bee Lewis Sr., of Decatur, who was the youngest child in his family. This crib was first placed in the interesting old Lewis home and was rescued when the home burned. The plantation surrounding the home has been in this family for many years and part of it has been bought by Clemson University. The downy head of small Robert

Lewis will rest on the dainty pillow which was used for all the brothers and sisters of his grandfather and for his father and which was presented to him by his paternal grandmother, Mrs. B. B. Lewis Sr.

Mrs. Lewis also gave the baby a small silver knife, fork and spoon which were given his grandfather by Mr. Barnard Bee, for whose husband, General Barnard Bee, he was named. Also a family heirloom is the exquisitely made quilt with flowers and birds appliqued on it, which will be used Miss Bryans Weds Robert B. Gammage In Dublin, Ga.

DUBLIN, Ga., Aug. 13.—The wedding of Miss Lee Hugh Bryans, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Bryans, of this city, to Robert B. Gammage, of Dublin, formerly of Atlanta, was solemnized Sunday morning in the home of the bride's parents, Rev. R. W. Eubanks, pastor of the Jefferson Street Baptist church, performed the impressive ceremony in the presence of the members of the families of the couple and a few close friends.

The improvised altar erected in the living room was formed in the center of the room with a background of stately pines, amillax and trailing greens. In the center was placed a long ivory basket filled with snow on the mountain and summer daisies, and a knot of white tulle completed this central grouping. Ivory floor baskets filled with the same flowers were placed on both sides of the altar.

A program of music was rendered by Miss Jennie Lester at the piano and Wilmer Peters, vocalist. Before the ceremony Mr. Peters sang "Love You Truly" and "The Sweetest Story Ever Told." The wedding march from "Lohengrin" announced the bridal party. Little Margie Dell Bryans, niece of the bride, was the flower girl. She preceded the bride wearing a dainty dress of pink crepe de chine and lace. The bride entered with her father, J. G. Bryans, and they were met at the altar by the bridegroom and his best man, Charlie Waller. During the reading of the nuptial vows, McDowell's "To a Wild Rose" was softly played by Miss Lester at the piano.

The bride, an attractive brunet, wore a smart ensemble of navy blue Jocelyn crepe. Her hat was a French felt model and her slippers and accessories were of matching tone. She wore a shoulder corsage of pink rosebuds.

Mrs. Bryans, mother of the bride, wore a beautiful dress of crepe with floral pattern in blue and white.

Mr. and Mrs. Gammage left for a short wedding trip. They will be at home to their friends upon their return in their apartment in the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Lord on Bellvue avenue.

The bride is a popular and capable young woman, and for the past year held a secretarial position in the office of Judge G. C. Bridgwood. Previous to that she was assistant to the secretary of the chamber of commerce. Mr. Gammage is the son of Mrs. Robert B. Gammage, of Atlanta and Watertown, N. Y. He is connected with Knowles laundry, having recently moved to this city.

Miss Hardin Weds Alfred L. Krueger

Interest centers in the announcement of the marriage of Miss Evelyn Louise Hardin and Alfred L. Krueger, which took place Friday evening, August 12, at the home of Rev. E. G. Thomason, who performed the ceremony. The wedding was performed in the presence of the immediate families of the bride and groom.

The bride's only attendant was Miss Ruby Warren, Ludwig Krueger, brother of the bridegroom, acted as best man.

The beautiful bride was becomingly gowned in a traveling suit of dark blue crepe, with accessories to match. Her flowers consisted of a shoulder bouquet of rosebuds and valley lilies.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Krueger left for a short wedding trip. After their return they will be at their home at 350 Clifford avenue, N. E.

Mrs. W. L. Wood Presents Pupils.

Mrs. W. L. Wood presented her pupils in a recital last Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. M. H. Hask, on Fourteenth street, George Waters, an advanced pupil, delighted those present with his brilliant execution of difficult numbers, and a composition of his own. Xylophone solos and duets by Mrs. Wood and little Gloria La Roche, were enjoyed, and readings by Vivien Baker, Mrs. Wood and Mrs. Earl Threlkeld were part of the entertainment.

Those taking part on the program were George Waters, Byron Hask, Phyllis Hask, Gertrude Laurens Threlkeld, Emma Louise Roach, Gloria La Roche, Louise Osborne, Vivien Baker, Helen Simpson.

Mrs. A. McD. Wilson was an honored guest on this occasion and several selections were played especially for her. She expressed appreciation of the honor conferred upon her.

Misses Harris Are Honored.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Barber entertained at their home on Dunwoody road last Tuesday evening, in compliment to their two nieces, Misses Thelma and Pearl Harris, of Dallas, Ga. The guests included Misses Mary Clyde Moore, Elizabeth Moore, Kathryn Moore, Belle Barfield, Ala Mae Frazier, Elene Frazier, Bertha Barfield, Pearl Harris, Thelma Harris, Kathryn Hardegree, La Vere Kirk and Willard Hilderbrand, Clyde Coleman, Maurice Womack, Bill Wilson, Paul Bratton, Guy Sewell, Oscar Burdett, Chester Kirk, Willie Shaw, Davis Amerson, Herman Barfield, Everett Gentry, Paul Dilbeck, Hoyt Palmer, Angus Gentry, Jack Strubbs, Clyde Holland, Sam Martin, J. C. Palmer and Ted Gentry.

Little Miss Whitworth Celebrates Birthday.

Little Louise Whitworth, daughter of Sergeant and Mrs. C. E. Whitworth, celebrated her sixth birthday Monday from 2 to 4 o'clock at her home on Garnett street. The flowers used in decorations were roses and ferns, and games and contests were enjoyed by the children. The winners were Betty Baggett, Loube Hodges and Billy Mulkey. Louise Whitworth, the honor guest, played several selections on the piano, her rendition being far in advance of her age. She received quite a number of pretty and useful gifts.

Seated at the table with the children were Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Kinsey, grandparents, and Mrs. Helen S. Moore, who has been present at every one of her birthdays. Those present were Louarn Rogers, Gene Reiler, Lilla Mae McAlpin, Milly Mulkey, Louise Hodges, Betty Baggett and Louise Whitworth.

Miss Hancock Weds Mr. Edwards.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Birdie Hancock and J. C. Edwards Jr., the ceremony taking place at the home of the Rev. Louie D. Newton, pastor of the Druid Hills Baptist church July 29.

Mrs. Edwards is a graduate from the Piedmont Hospital School of Nursing, having graduated from there in June, 1931. She is the daughter of N. N. Hancock, of Sylvester, Ga. Mr. Edwards is employed by John W. Yopp Publications, Inc.

After a short wedding trip to Florida Mr. and Mrs. Edwards will be at home in Atlanta.

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED

RALPH T. JONES

by Ralph T. Jones

The depression shows definite signs of passing. Atlanta, having sunk to a record low of merely three first-run theaters, again boasts four this morning. Reopening of the Fox brings back to amusement lovers the biggest and most beautiful palace of entertainment in the southeast.

And "Bring 'Em Back Alive," the record of Frank Buck's hair-raising adventures while trapping the most ferocious beasts of the African jungles—alive—is fully worthy to open the big house. Manager Ed Beck promises more pictures of equal caliber and we trust he has some surprises up his sleeve. In the meantime, by all means, don't miss "Bring 'Em Back Alive."

There is another picture in town this week that this column recommends with unusual pleasure. It is "Guilty as Hell," at the Paramount. With Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe. While these two are their old, delightful quarreling selves, don't expect to see another "Cock-Eyed World." It's altogether different. It's a murder story with comedy mixed throughout with the suspense. And it's a murder story to which the audience knows the solution from the start—but the characters on the screen don't. Which means, you ought to attend the Paramount in time to see the feature straight through from the beginning—or you'll lose half the kick.

Of course there is a great picture at the Georgia. The presence of Ruth Chatterton at the head of the cast guarantees that.

And we desire to draw your extra special attention to two pictures booked to begin their local runs next Saturday.

At the Paramount, "Horsefeathers," with the Four Marx Brothers. "Nuf sed."

At the Rialto, "American Madness" with Walter Huston. This is, undeniably, one of the big pictures of the year. If you doubt it, ask anyone of that capacity preview audience privileged to see it at another theater one Sunday afternoon a month or more ago.

Diary of a Pre-Viewer.

TUESDAY—At the Paramount, "Devil and the Deep." With Tallulah Bankhead, George Laughton and Gary Cooper. There are four factors that make this one of the most fascinating and enjoyable of recent pictures. First is the story. It is a marvel, one of the rare type that is perfectly fitted for the talking screen, with just enough conversation, with demands for tremendous acting ability and with action and thrill enough to satisfy anybody. Second there is George Laughton. He is an English actor, new to Hollywood. But if there has been a finer performance than his in this picture, this commentator has missed it. He is a revelation and a delight. Third, Gary Cooper. Believe it or not, Gary has at last discovered how to act. No longer does he seem to be reading his lines. Gone is all the stiffness. He is a new Gary, flinging a challenge to the most popular male actors of them all. And, fourth, is Tallulah Bankhead. I put her last for emphasis, not for belittlement. This daughter of Alabama has had rough treatment since she entered the movies. Prior to this picture she has never been given a vehicle worthy of her talents. Her box office value was nearly ruined by the things they gave her to play. Now comes a play and a role that fits her to perfection. And, for the first time, you see Tallulah as she really can be—an alluring, sympathy-arousing, delightful star. Don't miss "Devil and the Deep" when you see it billed at your theater.

Alamo Film Monday Is "This Reckless Age"

"This Reckless Age" feature picture at the Alamo theater Monday, is Paramount's filmization of Lewis Beach's stage success, "The Goose Hangs High." It is a sentimental comedy drama of parents who have dedicated their lives to supplying every want of their children, who in turn, following the "jazz" trend of this reckless age, give slight consideration to the grueling self-denial of their parents.

Charles "Buddy" Rogers, Peggy Shannon, Richard Bennett, Charlie Ruggles, Frances Dee and Frances Starr play the featured roles, supported by a cast of exceptional talent.

For Your Delectation This Week at the Theaters

George O'Brien Star in Western Epic for Rialto

Two great box-office attractions are to be seen at the Rialto theater this week. The current feature, which will conclude its run on Tuesday night, is another of those western masterpieces which delight audiences of all ages and types, with George O'Brien as the two-fisted hero and Cecilia Parker as the adorable heroine.

This picture, "Mystery Ranch," is from the best-selling novel by Stewart Edward White, "The Killer," and it depicts a powerful punch from start to finish. There are half a dozen fights of thrilling realism, plenty of hard riding and a delicious love story woven into a gem of the talking screen.

On Wednesday the Rialto will show "Vanity Fair," a modernized version of the immortal novel by William Makepeace Thackeray. This classic yarn of a bad woman, Becky Sharp, has been little changed in its essentials during the modernization process. That is because it is a story of human weaknesses and strength, which never change through the centuries even though in superficial things man and woman change.

Myrna Loy is ideally cast as Becky Sharp, the quick-witted and unscrupulous adventuress who faces life with the one ambition to make her beauty and sex appeal pay as big cash dividends as possible. Conway Tearle is perfect in the role of Rawdon Crawley and others of the carefully selected cast give magnificent interpretations of the various familiar roles. The story of "Mystery Ranch" revolves around a mysterious outlaw Apache against his neighbors from the "mystery ranch" deep in the Arizona hills. George O'Brien, as a member of the famous Arizona rangers, is sent to solve the mystery of the numerous crimes that originate in this ranch and to capture the ringleader. His adventures on this assignment and the beautiful girl he meets and loves in the course of his duty make of the procedure a typical—and better than ever—O'Brien vehicle.

Manager W. T. Murray, continuing his policy of securing only the best talking screen entertainment for his constantly growing list of patrons, has surrounded the two features of the week with selected short comedies, newsreels and other added attractions that make his programs outstanding offerings in bargain entertainment.

PRIZES FOR BEST BOY'S "MAKE-UP" AS MARX BROTHER

The Paramount theater offers all boys under the age of 16 the opportunity of winning cash prizes and free theater tickets in its Marx brothers' "Disguise" contest, which will be held in front of the theater Saturday morning, August 20, at 10 o'clock, the opening day of the latest Marx brothers' picture, "Horse Feathers."

Boys may disguise themselves as any one of the four Marx brothers they choose. The best disguise will win first prize of $10 in gold. Second and third prizes of $5 and $2.50 are also offered.

Boys not familiar with the make up used by the Marx brothers will find a number of photographs near the Paramount box office. These show all details of their costumes.

Manager E. E. Whitaker, of the Paramount, will judge the contestants in front of the theater Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. All boys entering the contest in complete disguise will be permitted to see "Horse Feathers" free.

"Guilty as Hell," in addition to bringing Lowe and McLaglen back to the screen together, has another point in its favor. It is a murder story in which you see the murderer being committed, know who did it, but holds you in suspense for the duration of the picture because it seems as if the authorities will never learn what you already know.

And that is where Lowe and McLaglen, with their particular brand of comedy, come in. McLaglen is cast as a hard-boiled (but not nearly so bright) detective. It is these two who ultimately solve the crime.

The story opens with a physician murdering his wife and covering up the traces apparently perfectly. Among other things he places in her hand a broken watch fob.

McLaglen and Lowe arrive on the scene, get busy, and trace the fob to Richard Arlen, who admits he has been intimate with the woman but claims to be innocent of the murder, but the mass of circumstantial evidence causes him to be sentenced to hang.

A dramatic climax finally straightens things out.

announcer whose frequent quarrels with his wife results in an accidental murder and forces him to flee from the police to another town.

"Arrowsmith," playing Thursday and Friday, stars Ronald Colman as a doctor who is sent to a foreign country to fight a disease and loses his own wife by it.

Saturday, "Destiny Rides Again," starring Tom Mix, is a story of a cowboy who is railroaded to prison by a group of cowtown politicians who attempt to get him out of the way said. Harpo is shown above at a critical moment just as he is about to win the game for old alma mater despite the ferocious linemen waiting to smear him in his tracks.

Two pictures are booked in Atlanta theaters for Saturday next, both of which belong among the very exceptional few. One is "American Madness," a Columbia production dealing with the drama of modern day banking and with Walter Huston in the main role. He is shown in a scene at left above. The other comes to the Paramount. It is "Horse Feathers," with the four Marx Brothers. "Nuf sed." Harpo is shown above at a critical moment just as he is about to win the game for old alma mater despite the ferocious linemen waiting to smear him in his tracks.

PITTS-TODD COMEDY "PARAMA PARTY" GRABAW RENANCE, THE NEWSREEL TALKING REPORTER

"Bring 'Em Back Alive" To Show At Newly Opened Fox All Week

"Bring 'Em Back Alive," Frank Buck's sensational story of animal trapping in the Malayan jungle, was the feature attraction selected by Manager Beck in opening the Fox theater Friday after being closed for two months. "Bring 'Em Back Alive" is scheduled for a week's run in conjunction with a well selected diversified program, thus inaugurating the new all-around policy.

Another innovation adopted for the benefit of Fox patrons is the free parking privilege for those purchasing a 40-cent admission ticket. It is said that this step will eliminate unnecessary time and trouble of Fox patrons in searching for parking space on the streets.

Frank Buck has gained the experience and reputation of one of the greatest authorities on wild animal life. He has spent years in trapping animals for all the leading zoos of the world. Never before has he taken the photographic stand until his production of "Bring 'Em Back Alive."

Realizing through his own experience the interest that exists in the lives of wild animals in their native haunts, Mr. Buck today along a picture outfit and instead of running away from scene showing combat between the large beasts of the jungle he stayed on the spot, and as a result caught with the camera some of the most exciting and thrilling scenes between fighters for food laid in the background of the actual jungle.

One of the big thrills of the picture is the fight between a hungry tiger and a thirty-foot python. There is also a battle between a crocodile and the python, an alligator and a tiger, and many other thrilling scenes.

Frank Buck considers the tiger the real villain in his jungle drama. This ferocious beast, whose sole concern is today's dinner, acts and fights with rare unconcern. He has no managers, no publicity men, no assistants, and no doubles. He plays the star part and directs it all himself. During the course of the picture he lists among his adversaries a giant crusher python, a twenty-foot crocodile, a near but not gaudy black panther, and a bull water buffalo. Before he was run down and brought to book by Buck and his assistants he had attempted homicide four times, suicide twice, and murder and highway robbery more times than could be mentioned.

Intimate views of how wild animals are captured alive affords another interesting sideline to this picture and the big thrill that comes at the end of the picture is when Buck attempts to force the thirty-foot python in the cage. He gets free and it is only the quickness of Buck in recapturing him that prevents serious consequences.

Ruth Chatterton Has Leading Role In Georgia Film

"The Rich Are Always With Us," Ruth Chatterton's first starring vehicle for First National, drew an unusually large crowd to the Georgia theater Saturday night for its opening engagement. Manager Holden, of the Georgia, attributes the success of "The Rich Are Always With Us" to the great drawing power of its star, the excellence of its cast, the story, the settings, direction and technical details. The picture will be presented for the rest of this week.

The story concerns one of the wealthiest women in the country, her marriage, subsequent loss of her husband to a debauche love life, and the ultimate happiness she finds with a handsome young author who had long been in love with her. The young author is portrayed by George Brent, a newcomer to the screen.

The excellent supporting cast includes Edite Davis, Adrienne Dore, John Miljan, Robert Warwick and many, many others.

An interesting fact in connection with the making of "The Rich Are Always With Us" was that Miss Chatterton, in addition to being the star of the picture, helped to direct and gave advice to the younger actresses. Much time was spent in preparing this first starring picture.

Miss Chatterton for First National, as it was felt that in her past few pictures she had been given bad stories, stories that only appealed to a class audience. However, her newest effort was made to appeal to all.

In addition to the splendid feature, the Georgia offers numerous attractions, including the black-masked organist, who offers a slide novelty entitled "The Music Test."

'Hatchet Man' Booked For West End Theater

Edwin G. Robinson is at the West End theater Monday and Tuesday in "The Hatchet Man." Robinson portrays a feared member of a tong, whose vowed duty is to carry out the edicts of the 'secret society' of the hatchet.

Wednesday brings "Lena Rivers," with Charlotte Henry, James Kirkwood, Joyce Compton and Beryl Mercer.

Joe E. Brown appears Thursday and Friday in "Local Boy Makes Good." Joe plays the part of one John Miller, a timid and near-sighted clerk in the bookstore of a college town.

Saturday "Law and Order" will be shown. The scenes of the picture are laid in the frontier town of Tombstone, Ariz., one of the most colorful settlements of the days when the six-shooter constituted the principal force of law and order. Walter Huston is starred.

Juveniles Featured
In Ponce de Leon Film

"Are These Our Children," with Eric Linden and Rochelle Hudson, an all-star juvenile cast, is the Monday and Tuesday feature at the Ponce de Leon theater.

"The Unexpected Father," with Slim Summerville and Zasu Pitts, is the Wednesday feature. Slim is cast as a wealthy young bachelor, who, immediately before his wedding day, has an adorable baby girl take up with him.

"Forbidden," a strong dramatic offering featuring Barbara Stanwyck, is the Thursday and Friday feature. This is a fascinating story of a divine romance that dared to be real. "The Big Shot," with Eddie Quillan and Maurice O'Sullivan, is booked for Saturday. It is an intensely interesting story of a young man who beats a bunch of youngsters at their own game when they try to sell him some worthless property.

'Amateur Daddy' Billed For Empire Showing

Warner Baxter in "Amateur Daddy," with Marion Nixon in the female lead, is the offering at the Empire theater for Monday and Tuesday. Baxter's role is that of a shy, and kind-hearted bachelor.

Wednesday and Thursday bring Douglas Fairbanks in "Around the World in 80 Minutes." Fairbanks has taken his love of thrill out of the realm of fancy and into strange byways of real life.

"Girl of the Rio" will be the other attraction, starring Dolores del Rio. Friday, "This Is the Night," say talkie of marital complications will be shown. Lily Damita, Charles Ruggles and Roland Young, three former Broadway notables, are featured. Miss Damita is shown as a Parisian actress who is hired by (and married to) a posh as the "wife" of Roland Young.

Saturday brings "The Miracle Man" with Sylvia Sydney and Chester Morris. It is a story of thieves and pickpockets.

Joan Bennett Is Star
In Buckhead Offering

Joan Bennett and Spencer Tracy share the lead in "She Wanted a Millionaire," to be shown at the Buckhead theater Monday and Tuesday. It is a modern and lavishly produced story of a small-town factory girl who wins a beauty contest at Atlantic City.

"The Impatient Maiden," featuring Low Ayres and Mae Clarke, is the picture for Wednesday. The story, which has much comedy, revolves around a stenographer who falls in love with her friend in an apartment in the tenements.

The offering for Thursday and Friday is "The Miracle Man," co-starring Sylvia Sydney and Chester Morris. The story concerns four crooks who go to a small town to evade the police. Saturday offers "Society Girl," with James Dunn, Spencer Tracy and Peg

Joan Crawford Stars
In Tenth Street Film

"Letty Lynton," showing at the Tenth Street theater Monday and Tuesday, co-stars Joan Crawford and Robert Montgomery in an ultra-modern drama of a rich heiress who after many love affairs finds herself in a dangerous predicament when she finally finds the right man.

Wednesday Jack Hooten stars in "Behind the Mask," a thrilling story of mystery and horror, revealing the actions of a crazed scientist who killed everyone who attempted to investigate his activities as a dope smuggler.

"Scandal for Sale," Thursday's feature attraction, stars Charles Bickford and Rose Hobart. The story follows the career of a professional black-sheep newspaperman who dealt in people's secrets and put them in headlines.

Friday brings "Lena Rivers," the famous story of an orphan girl who thought that life held nothing but hard knocks until she met the man she loved. Charles Bickford and James Kirkwood have the leading roles.

Saturday Lila Damita and Charles Ruggles will be seen in "This Is the Night," an attraction that offers dramatic moments and hilarious comedy.

In Hollywood

(Copyright, 1932, by The Associated Press.)
(By "Society" Journalism.)
HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Aug. 13.—Whenever directors are mentioned in Hollywood, Rouben Mamoulian's name creeps into the foreground of the conversation.

For some months now it has been ranking with Ernst Lubitsch and Lewis Milestone—and if you know pictures as all you know what that means in picture production. These two are the supreme authors in the line of the motion picture colony. And Rouben Mamoulian now makes the duo a triumvirate with Cecil De Mille. Mamoulian's picture, "Love Me Tonight," is a perfect example of his style.

I've seen the film in its crude stages. Without doubt it will be cut and recut, revised and altered to suit the severe demands of this conductor, and, in this case, part author. Rouben Mamoulian possibly saw a million flaws in a picture which appeared to me to be sheer enchantment and a perfect revelation of the art of picture making. I jammed the picture in a box and forgot it. I thought of it as a thing—it resounded with thundering applause for a good five minutes at the finish of a picture. The net result of the 1932 picture and that the world is down-in-the-mouth for very good reason.

Story in Brief
When first I talked with Rouben Mamoulian about the Chevalier venture, he told me his idea of making this picture. It is the story of a tailor who falls in love with a princess and wins her. Such things happen chiefly in fairy tales. Rouben Mamoulian well knows. So his chief intent was to capitalize on the dream of Maurice Chevalier and the talents and beauty of Jeanette MacDonald, and yet to keep the story well within the fictional bounds which must, of necessity, be the outposts of such a concept. The net result of Mamoulian's effort is sheer enchantment in the form of a picture.

No vehicle made by Chevalier in his Hollywood career so utterly reveals his many talents—none so utterly suits him. In none of his previous efforts has he attempted anything beyond the role of entertainer which made him famous. But in "Love Me Tonight" we see a Chevalier turned actor—and doing the job amazingly well. We see a love scene hung between laughter and tears. . . . And nothing an actor can be asked to do is more difficult than this. Chevalier and Jeanette MacDonald (CQ) carry it through to a perfect and triumphant conclusion.

A love song, blown on the wings of chance, drifts quite naturally from a tailor's shop in a humble quarter of Paris, to the chateau of a lady of noble birth. The technique used in the progress of the song is smooth and amazing.

Symphony of Sound.
In the opening scenes of the picture—Paris awakening to the dawn—Rouben Mamoulian shows his fine musical training. He was brought from Europe to America to conduct for the American Company at Rochester, N. Y. He builds, in this awakening of a city, a symphony of sound that is destined to rouse the enthusiasm of all who hear it—it is comparable only to things done by the sound regisseurs in foreign-made pictures.

But in addition to this it has the camera perfection which only Hollywood can bring. It has the smoothness of a Hollywood cast, the impeccable beauty of its women and the delightful comedy of Charles Butterworth and Charles Ruggles.

No matter how original the European-made production may be—no matter how brilliantly its effects are carried out—it invariably lacks some patine of technical perfection which this city of the cinema alone brings to its finished product.

Every player from Myrna Loy—in one of the finest characterizations she has yet brought to the screen—Audrey Smith as the aristocratic head of the hopelessly dull and vitiated old French family—to Charles Ruggles as the charming good-for-nothing scion of

Auburn and Devaux Establish New Speed, Endurance Mark

BY E. Y. WATSON.
(Copyright, 1932, by The North American Newspaper Alliance.)

DETROIT, Aug. 13.—Rivalry among automobile companies in establishing new speed and endurance records is bringing new names of stock cars into the headlines. The newest to achieve this distinction are Auburn and Devaux.

Auburn, according to the contest board of the American Automobile Association, now is credited with setting 26 new marks formerly held by other makes. In addition 11 others are credited to this make, covering distances for which no previous records have existed.

The Auburn performance covered distances from one kilometer up to 500 miles, and registered high speeds of 100.7 miles an hour together with an average speed of 88.93 miles per hour for 500 miles.

Stock car records, as they are placed on official record by the A. A. A. contest board, are divided into seven classes. The Auburn marks, it is stated officially, although made in class B, are also new for the unlimited class of American stock car records. In fact, they are the highest speeds ever recorded for the specified distances and periods by any American stock car regardless of class.

In another classification, also authentic, is a recently created group of records credited to a Continental Devaux car. These were made in what is known as class C, and were certified following a run of 1,000 miles. The average speed maintained for the distance was 65.93 miles an hour, carrying with it 2 new entries in the official record list.

In both instances the theater of operations was the Muroc dry lake, a flat surface in the Mojave desert of California. On the level terrain courses of 5 and 10 miles in circumference are used. Auburn utilized both, while the Devaux trial was confined to the 5-mile ring.

A stock car, according to the A. A. A. definition covering certified trials and stock car races, is a manufacturer's model of a car that is in regular production, as described in the current catalog of the manufacturer, is advertised in the regular schedule of advertising, is on sale through the regular trade channels, carries the same equipment or optional equipment as

Announced by Standard Oil

Motorists throughout the south will be interested in the announcement from W. E. Smith, president of the Standard Oil Company Incorporated in Kentucky, at Louisville, that "Esolube," the new hydrofined motor oil recently perfected by the Standard Oil Company, is now being sold by all Standard dealers and service stations.

This motor oil, perfected for use in high compression motors, will replace the well-known "Standard" motor oil at no extra cost to the motorist. "Esolube" is not only a new oil, a better oil and a different oil, but it is made by an entirely new process of refining. This is the hydrofining process, which won the 1931 Nobel Prize for Chemistry for the two chemists that perfected it. This new and exclusive process is expected to revolutionize the manufacture of motor oil.

Hydrofining ages the oil by rearranging its chemical structure. Briefly, the process of making hydrofined Esolube consists of mixing a high-grade crude oil fraction with pure hydrogen gas compressed to 3,500 pounds per square inch. This mixture is heated to an extremely high temperature—500 degrees Fahrenheit. It is then placed into a reaction chamber where, in the presence of a secret "catalyst" or transforming agent, the oil molecules are ripped apart, the hydrogen gas reacts and changes the basic chemical structure of the oil.

Perfectly Cast.
That household and the three maidens admirably done by Elizabeth Patterson, Blanche Fredici and Ethel Griffes—are perfectly in the picture. The comedy of Charles Butterworth—the savior who had rank but not wit—is the best he has done since he left the New York stage. Butterworth must have the correct vehicle to be a smash hit—and this time he has found it. The lines suit his type of comedy. The situations fit him like a glove and the same may be said for Charles Ruggles.

Myrna Loy becomes a beauty in the fancy dress costume and her acting is splendid throughout. She is a striking exemplar of that chic which screen women understand in perfection: her unbelievable slenderness and beautiful grooming. Jeanette MacDonald sings those lyrics of Rogers and Hart as if she had been doing it all her life.

Gay Nonchalance.
The whole has a Gilbert and Sullivan charm—a gay nonchalance and beauty which we sadly need on the screen these days. The musical hunt—with bagpipes—a stag rhythmized perfectly to the obligato of the orchestra—horses and humans all perfectly in the picture—is the high light of the technical angle of the picture. And the tricks of camera and sound transcend any others you have yet seen.

obtained, use of "double-high" to reduce engine speed on the straightaway is an influence on gasoline economy, as it reduces by one-third the number of cylinder-fuels of charge for a given distance. In the same way it proportionately slows up the speed of pistons, valves, crankshaft and other moving parts so that loads are lightened, wear reduced and longer life insured.

Latitude is allowed in changes of carburetor, gasoline feed, fuel used, rear axle ratio and compression ratio, with the proviso that certified tests must demonstrate what may be reasonably expected from cars which are sold by dealers. The driver is the only passenger the car is required to carry.

The seven classes into which the stock cars are divided run from "A" to "G," and from big to little in piston displacement, signifying cylinder combustion space.

Class A includes cars having 488 cubic inches of displacement or over in the engines.

Class B, in which Auburn is included, covers the power plant division with a range of 306 to 488 cubic inches. Both cars that underwent the Muroc dry lake trials to set the new records had 12-cylinder power plants. They developed 100 horsepower at 2,400 revolutions.

Class C, for which Continental-Devaux is credited with top-place achievement, ranges from 153 to 458 cubic inches. The Devaux uses a six-cylinder engine, and produces 75 horsepower at 3,600 revolutions.

Class D cars have engines displacing 122 to 183 cubic inches. Class E ranges from 91.5 to 122 cubic inches; Class F, from 61 to 91.5; and Class G from 45 to 67.

According to the A. A. A. rules as last issued, February, 1931, there is no world rating for stock cars, "regardless of class." Records made in this division, into which Auburn is credited with entering, apply to American only, and not to Europe.

For stock car trials to be held in this division, the courses must be straight-away runs, and the tracks at Atlantic City and Indianapolis for the longer distances.

Concerning inter-city runs, the A. A. A. holds that, as a matter of national policy, the contest board declines connection, sanction or supervision of inter-city trials or speed tests that involve the violation of any motor vehicle statute.

Since the oil is subject to high temperatures and enormous pressure during the manufacture, only parts of the oil that can withstand these conditions—many times more severe than occur in any automobile engine—are left for Esolube.

Before being placed on the market for commercial use, Esolube has been given exhaustive tests in all forms of automobiles, trucks, tractors, etc., to prove its worth.

Double High Gear
Franklin Twelves

Incorporating as optional equipment on the new Franklin supercharged, air-cooled Twelve, a "double-high" rear axle which gives the most efficient rear ratio for either mountain or straightaway driving, the Franklin Automobile Company's final achievement in other exclusive engineering advancement in the fine car field. In reality, with this equipment, the owner has two cars in one and can change from one gear ratio to another by a mere flip of a lever on the instrument panel and thus obtain just the kind of power he wants.

With one position of the lever the engine power reaches the rear wheels through a gear reduction ratio of 5.1 to 1. The other position puts a ratio of 3.4 to 1 into action. The 5.1 to 1 would naturally be the driver's selection while driving under city conditions or where there would be fairly continuous driving through hilly country. The other gearing would be employed for a long stretch of fast going over the usual variety of open highway where most drivers like to "step on it." Even if much of a day's driving requires the use of both ratios alternately, it takes but the fraction of a second to change from one gearing to another. No manual shifting is required.

The use of "double-high" enables the Franklin Twelve owner to enjoy remarkable smoothness and maximum ability, also to make compensations for load, road conditions and speed, whereas without such equipment he must make the best of his single ratio regardless of what conditions he encounters.

In addition to the super-smoothness

Goodrich Mails
Most Beautiful Printed Piece

Classified as the most beautiful printed piece ever published by a tire manufacturer, a new sales manual profuse with color, and outstandingly modern has just been issued by The B. F. Goodrich Company, Akron, Ohio, describing its new colored tires.

Portraying harmonious color combinations on automobiles, the manual suggests colored tires to match the color of any motor car, as well as a contrasting or complementary-colored tire.

These color combinations have been suggested by the staff of artists which created the new colored tires.

Among the colored tires illustrated in just the shades in which they are made are tangerine, lime, gold, bronze, carmelian, chestnut, Arabian brown, spruce, willow, granite, carnation, English vermillion, cardinal, amber, colonial blue, sandstone, claret, laurel, sienna.

Titled "New Feathers for the Peacock," the opening paragraph reads: "A vain bird, the peacock?—Or perhaps, justifiably proud?—Beautiful feathers made for proud birds? Aren't bright flowers made for the man who is proud of his garden or his home?—Well, there's no doubt about the new tires. They're made for the man who is proud of his car."

The new Goodrich colored tires are made by the exclusive Colorworld process, by which colors are ingrained in the rubber. Colors will not wash off, wear off or fade. The tires are all custom-built, orders being filled after color samples are displayed by dealers.

Willys-Overland
Streamline Cars
Set New Record

More than ten years of average driving was set up by two of the new Willys-Overland since before they were introduced to the public. Two standard roadster models were selected for this test, the goal being 50,000 miles each, but at the end of this mark they were both in such perfect running condition, despite their average of 1,000 miles in each 24-hours, that Willys-Overland officials decided to increase the goal to 100,000 miles each.

The tests were completed shortly before the new streamline series was presented to the public. One of the cars made its entire run over the highways of the country, while the other car with a crew of three drivers, alternating each eight hours, made its first 50,000 miles on the famous brick track of the Indianapolis speedway and finished the run over coast-to-coast highways.

This engine has the same basic constructional features as the models that won the annual Pike's Peak climb in 1930 and 1931 and in addition established sixteen A. A. A. speed records which have yet to be surpassed.

The "100,000-mile Silver Streak motor" develops 68 horsepower, will do 48 miles an hour in second and better than 70 miles an hour in high. Since the presentation of the new streamline series, which includes in addition to the Willys-Overland Six, a line of eight-cylinder models and a custom built Willys-Knight, dealers report sustained interest on the part of the public. To meet the influx of orders from the field, factory production for July has been stepped up 20 per cent above the schedule originally planned.

PLYMOUTH is in the SPOTLIGHT

BECAUSE AMERICA

"Looked at all three"

You can't fool the American public—especially in times like these.

They're looking at all three lowest-priced cars with critical eyes. Driving all three with an open mind.

And increasing thousands and thousands are picking the new Plymouth.

They admire Plymouth's smart styling.

Its impressive beauty.

They find that the new Plymouth is longer, bigger and more comfortable to ride in.

In traffic and on open road, they enjoy a new kind of performance—Floating Power performance. Absolutely vibrationless. Unbelievably smooth. Delightfully restful. And so economical!

After ten minutes at the wheel, they agree that "any car without patented Floating Power is out-of-date."

In the scale of values, they have proved that the new Plymouth is unquestionably today's more-for-the-dollar car.

ISADORA DUNCAN IN SOUTH AMERICA

An Amazing Journey. By Maurice Dumesnil. Readers perhaps recall the fascinating autobiography published several years ago in which Isadora Duncan wrote not only interestingly but frankly on all the important periods regarding her life with one exception and that was her adventures in the great country of Russia—at which time she placed another volume in which she would tell about her six months in South America, but to the amazement of her friends she failed to do so, her comment covering about three pages.

The opening chapter introduces Paris in 1916—Paris during the World War—and then from Paris to New York, and New York to Buenos Aires. She writes most interestingly of the beautiful city which has been the home of many prominent Americans since that time; in August of 1916 she spent sometime in Montevideo and was on her way to Rio de Janeiro. It was in this beautiful city that she grows enthusiastic in her enjoyment of people, places and things, and it is in Rio de Janeiro that she made the first mistake, so great that her influence was found on the decline, much to the regret of her friends and admirers all over the world.

The author of this biography, Maurice Dumesnil, was the leader of her orchestra, and naturally he was closer to the great dancer than anyone else. In this volume he tells a story of life, of living, of many amusing incidents, some lovely—and many experiences that will be read with much interest. And yet all through the volume he brings to the surface always the great warm generous personality that was the great dancer.

In September, 1927, the finale—the epilogue that tells a sad, sad story, at the close of which the dancer falls. The last page has been written in the life of Isadora Duncan. There are many attractive illustrations. (Ives Washburn, Publisher, New York.)

NEW FICTION.

Three Loves. By A. J. Cronin, author of "Hatter's Castle" which was conceded to be one of the outstanding books in both England and America in 1931. And now the middle of 1932 the reader of the fiction world is greeted with another unusual, but delightful, fiction story of more than 500 pages woven around a Scottish woman whose "three loves" are her husband, her son, and her God.

The following is a comment by a writer who was much impressed with the author's style in "Hatter's Castle," and in his creation of James Brodie, the transatlantic Scotch hatter: "The 'Three Loves' marks a distinct advance in the author's art of execution. The characterization is finer and more restrained, and there are more arresting situations and considerable amount of action. The story progresses from a Clyde-side town to Glasgow, London and Brussels."

If the reader likes the Victorian style then this large volume will not contain a dull page. It is so overwhelming in the lasting impression it makes that no one who reads it will be uninterested in live subjects, and unusual stories, written somewhat a little out of the ordinary, will hesitate to make a favorite of the author's work. It is needless to say that Mr. Cronin has not disappointed the friends made in 1931. (Little Brown & Co., Boston, $2.50.)

NEW FICTION.

The Stolen Statesman. An Inspector Slade story. By Leonard R. Gribble, author of quite a number of interesting mystery stories. Listen to the story: William Farroll Home, secretary of England, mysteriously disappeared and under tragic circumstances. The news spread like wild fire and Scotland Yard sent their best man down to Coddington at once with instructions not to let the news get hold of the story, but go to work on it before they could get a tip off. Immediately upon reaching his destination Inspector Slade finds not one clue but many, all of which will also surprise the reader, and it was not until he had run down the last clue did he begin to close in on one of the smoothest and most noted criminals in England.

Just the mystery story that you need for your vacation—the writer is clever and knows how to win the praise of his readers with a Red Badge mystery story. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

Woman in Chains. By Elizabeth Alexander. Author of "Second Choice." The author has written a 1932 woman's problem—a story that is becoming more and more of a problem for women, for while all women are not a "party of the first part," they naturally are interested in the problems that are wrecking the lives of their neighbors, friends, or simply some unhappy woman whose home has been wrecked and "for whom I feel sorry."

What steps would you take when you were confronted with the problem? This is 1932 and one of the problems that is attracting much attention is the "reorganization" problem—even in matrimony. Another problem is the one in which every one is interested are once more free. (Sears Publishing Company, New York.)

The Good Shepherd. By John Rathbone Oliver. A novel of Tyrol. This story was first published under the pseudonym of "John Rathbone," but it has now been completely revised, and has a new preface by the distinguished author who for the first time allows it to appear under his own name.

The story is woven around an American surgeon who becomes a self-exile in Austria on account of an unpleasant past. During this time there comes an appeal in a lonely mountain village for a physician and one he could not resist. It was during his medical work among these poor, simple people that Dr. Edwards receives both interest and sympathy from the schoolmaster and the priest, and their believing in him soon brings him to believe in himself. Later to this is added the love of a lovely woman and so in time the shadow is lifted and he becomes the beloved friend and to his patients he is called "The Good Shepherd."

The story is so realistic that one can almost see this remote village in the quiet Tyrolean valley under the Alps and also see oneself taking part in the life of the simple people who feel that the "beloved friend" has been sent to lighten their burdens. (Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York City.)

Girl on the Make. By Ahmed Abdullah and Faith Baldwin, who collaborated in the best seller "Broadway Interlude." Another modern Ray Long story with New York City at its setting. (Richard Ray Long and Richard R. Smith, New York.)

Mrs. Green's Daughter-in-Law. By Nellie Gardner White. Readers of "Hawthorne House" will find the author's next story of even more interest. It is an absorbing family story and one in which every son-in-law and daughter-in-law especially will find much to entertain them some rainy evening. It is not a dull story but written in a clever, sympathetic style that will appeal to the one who is left behind in the old homestead and to those who go out to make homes of their own. (Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York City.)

NEW FICTION.

The Wifehood of Jessica. By Louise Platt Hauck. When Bill Winthrop

MAURICE DUMESNIL, Author of "An Amazing Journey."

was introduced to Jessica he knew then that there would be a whirlwind wooing in which he would win. He told her that it was a case of love at first sight, that she was intended for him. So when she was with him she could dream of years of happiness and without him a life of emptiness. But the love in a cottage did not materialize for his sister Mildred was a member of the household and of course there were difficulties and of the start. She had a dog but was a victim to cat phobia so Smoke and Flame had to be separated from their young mistress, but there were other difficulties not so easily adjusted and which, of course, caused unhappiness, the same old unhappiness so often experienced by a young wife living among her husband's family. The link that held her weaker and weaker and finally snapped. This is a story of human emotions, everyday experiences, but it is hoped the end of the story, for this was only the beginning and the ending was the happiness of which dreams are made. (Penn Publishing Co., Philadelphia.)

Barton's Mills. A saga of the pioneers. By A. Hyatt Verrill. The author loves history and from his boyhood he has been studying different and interesting phases of the days of long ago.

He has now written a historical, colorful novel that will be quite interesting for he deals with the rise and fall of a settlement in the dark corners of Maine. Do not lose sight of the fact that this is a story of Maine pioneer days and of the life of the people who started for the wild forest, where they built their little home and prepared for a hard winter. As is usual, it was not long before other families followed until it became a community.

While there have been many stories written about pioneers, this is a story of pioneer Maine in which is realistically portrayed life, love, death, trials and hardships. It is a story which extends from colonial days to the present, and the reader will find Barton's Mills worth reading. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

JUNIOR BOOKS.

Washington—Complete Washington Anniversary Program. For every grade. New ways to honor the father of our country. Compiled and edited by Alma Laird. There are Washington readings and plays, new poems, and a new book of Washington songs set to music.

There have been so many things written about Washington that the reader would think that nothing else could be said, but this book of Washington programs will prove to be a real pleasure to every child.

Miss Florence Hale, president of the National Education Association, says: "Each program confirms to modern 'as of program-making.' A most interesting one-act play written for Washington's birthday but might be said, but during this time the author is during Washington's first term as president, the place Washington's home, and the characters are Washington, Lafayette, Jefferson, Hamilton and Knox. It is a valuable book for schools, clubs, etc. (Noble & Noble, New York.)

101 Ways to Entertain a Child. When recovering from an illness, or when you are alone with a child, what can be lonelier than the little shut-in or the little stay-at-home. Evidently Jane Parker, editor of the Children's Corner, knew something of this loneliness, so she wrote a book, where, for she has divided her book into four weeks and each week has to entertain itself. At the end of the four weeks, the reader will find that he has had a real good time all by himself. Illustrations from original drawings by Mabel Betsy Hill. (Noble & Noble, New York.)

ARTIST OF TRAPEZE QUITS AS PARTNER IS KILLED BY FALL

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 13. (AP)—Orville Larose, trapeze artist, brushed away tears today and vowed he was through with the show business. The first accident his act had suffered in 10 years took the life of Irene Berger, 21, one of his partners, last night, and injured his young wife, who he believes died of shock.

Larose had finished his own part and stood looking up 125 feet to where Miss Berger and his wife, Roxa, were performing above the steel pier, amusement place. Miss Berger hung from a trapeze with her feet. Larose dangled from another by her teeth.

When Miss Berger reached to catch Roxa her foot slipped and both shot to the floor. The former died in a hospital, the latter suffered a fractured back and punctured lung.

Showing an extreme dislike for foxes, a horse owned by Fritz Niehaus, of Millville, Iowa, has killed two of the animals on the Nebraska farm this year. The horse took after a fox which was raiding a litter of young pigs and killed it. A few weeks later the horse came to the defense of chickens and killed another fox. Niehaus collected the bounty, kept the pelt.

During an alfalfa weevil outbreak in Utah, 45 species of birds attacked the pest, according to the United States bureau of biological survey.

The larva of the ant lion is a little beast of prey, catching in its mouth insects which fall into the conical-shaped hole it digs in the sand.

Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Porch are spending two weeks at St. Simons Island.

Mrs. E. L. Vickers, of Douglas, Ga., is visiting her daughter, Mrs. E. C. Curtis.

Miss Helen Bland, of Gulfport, Miss., is visiting friends here.

"SISTERS" CHURCH MARKS BIRTHDAY; HISTORY RECALLED

TENNESSEE, Ga., Aug. 13.—Protracted services being held this week at Sisters Baptist church, one of the largest country churches in the Washington Association, recalls the fact that this month will mark its 108th anniversary and shows a record that is unique as to history and name.

The legend of its name goes back to the time when the Indians roamed the forests of this section and there were few white settlers. There were at that time three other Baptist churches in widely separated sections of the country. One was founded in 1792; Bethlehem, in 1794, and the other, a few years later, and these were the only places where members of this denomination could attend worship.

The story goes that three devout sisters of that community, anxious to establish a church there, met regularly and worked persistently for its establishment. Their efforts were finally successful and when the church was organized with 24 members, in 1824, it was given the name of Sisters, in honor of the faithful three.

30 Schools Will Attend.

Thirty distinguished American universities will send representatives to the University of Iowa campus November 10-12 for the annual convention of the Association of American Universities. The status of professional training in education, graduate work in medicine and engineering and the relation of undergraduate work to advanced courses will be the fundamentals before the convention

1 "IT CERTAINLY will be spiffy to reach Paris with That Family Jewel in our possession," says Sylvia to Bob, as the Eiffel Tower looms into view. Both of them think they've shaken the whole Fez Army. BUT a first-class menace clings to their car. You can bet that Oriental isn't just out for a joy-ride!

3 "NOBODY will ever find your jewel here," whispers Bob as he drops the priceless bauble into a Venetian vase. "You really are the smartest thing," the D. D. tells him as they stroll to the small party, consisting of four hundred millionaires, royalty and Grand Dukes. "Nobody would look there." "Sez you," sneers the be-fezed marauder.

2 "AND HERE, mother," handsome Bob explains, "is Sylvia, the Deb Detective." Mrs. Lee insists that Sylvia be her guest in Paris. "We're giving a small party for Bob, tonight," says Mrs. Lee, "and you must be co-guest of honor. We are eager to hear how you rescued the marvelous Ritzmote heirloom from those international gem thieves." "I'll add an unhappy ending to that story tonight," mutters the incensed Oriental lurking behind the marble staircase.

4 THE COAST is clear and he lifts vase and all. Hey, Bob! Hey, Sylvia! But they are dancing together to soft lights and sweet music. The villainous Master Mind tiptoes out in fast tango time, trying a quick getaway over the balcony.

What Price Extras?

LAST week's comments in this space, on the falldown of newspapers which are not hooked up and rigged up to get and deliver the news, the features and the pictures with the amazingly high-powered and organized efficiency of the day, brought an unexpectedly big inflow of mail.

Well—if the subject is interesting, and I know something of it and so many of my readers don't and want to, let's have some more of it.

For example:

Most layfolks have an idea that a newspaper smacks its lips and rubs its palms when a big story comes along—a story that makes circulation. Nothing could be further from fact.

A Lindbergh story to a newspaper is a disaster!

What though we do take on an extra hundred thousand? We lose money on every copy printed, and thus lose more on the original cost of the output. We spend thousands on extra reporters, extra expense accounts, extra airplanes and cars and motorcycles to get the news and photos and get them in, extra space in the editorial sections, extra resetting and proof-reading and make-over as the story has its changes every few minutes with new developments, extra telegraph charges (and they come high) and telephone charges—and a lot more.

What do we get out of it? Nothing—nothing but good will and a high sense of doing our duty to our readers, and that is compensation enough; but you can't put it in the bank.

Yes. Surely. Every newspaper wants circulation. It cannot live without it and cannot rise without more. But not sporadic circulation. The heart's blood of a newspaper's revenue, with very few exceptions, is advertising. Advertising pays through two factors—quantity and rates. Rates are set by the page, the column or the line—agate line. Agate is a size of type which runs 14 lines to the inch.

Both quantity and rate are fluctuated according to the circulation. The larger the run the more volume the paper gets and the more it gets per line. But that isn't switched daily—monthly—seldom even yearly. A steady, healthy rise, because of general high satisfaction with a sheet, justifies an increase and brings in more copy at higher rates. But running 600,000 today and 800,000 for a month beginning tomorrow wouldn't get a paper another nickel. And the additional copies would hand it a neat set-back.

Yet, it is the tradition of the game, every paper battles for increased sales. It's in the nature of our trade.

Head-hunters

The art of headline writing is something on which, as far as I know, no book or even brochure has ever been compiled. Reading headlines gives no one even a remote idea of its complexities.

Headlines do not fall in by accident. The type is designated in advance, according to importance of the item and position the story will occupy—oh, yes, every story is laid out in a "dummy," and isn't just sheaved in where it chances to fall. Type measures so many units to the column: a unit is a letter or a space, except that Mary Astor (Mrs. Franklin Thorpe) and Her Baby Daughter, Born in Honolulu.

M and W are 1 1/4 units and I and lower case l are 1/2 units. (Like Illinois delegates.) Type is not made of rubber. It must "count out." It must fill and cannot run over column rules. There are many styles of heads, and they must be followed, as each paper has its style—one may like step-off forms of two lines or three, another may like pyramids of two lines or three, and so on.

The headwriter is called, strangely enough, a "copy-reader," since for generations the two were combined in the job. He gets expert and quick, so that he counts mentally and thinks to the count. Some are uncanny at it.

The newspaper headline has been responsible for keeping in the language a great many of the old, simple Anglo-Saxon words which would have died long ago—because they are short. Take—

Pact, Lure, Quiz, Hop, Balm, Blast, Solon, Gun, Link, Craah, Deft, Blase, Wed, Dole, Thug, Slay, and numerous others, which, as the headlines have popularized them, would have long since faded out of general use.

The ingenuity at contraction has been remarkable, so that every child translates at sight G. O. P., B. E. F.,

A. E. F. Tiger, Chi, Los, Auto, Plane, L. Taxi, Domo, A. F. of L. Vet. Pen, Lindy, initials of all the railroads and hundreds of other abbreviations, all invented by mother necessity and the headline-writer. Teddy has been replaced by F. D.—made so by the headline boys.

The sporting-page crews have been even more recognizable in this movement, so that every ball-team and fighter has a short handle identified on sight—Bucs, Giants, Dodgers, Senators, Cubs, Sox, Reds, Browns, Bears, Cards, A's, Gene, Jack, Mox, Babe, Benneh, Keed, Hack, Ban, Duke—to any sports reader any of these is immediately specific.

Art Unsung

Of course, there is a good deal more to head-writing than making the type fit. Each head should be in the key of the story—frivolous matter should not be seriously advertised, and vice versa. The main idea of the display type above a yarn is to intrigue the reader to follow through and to help him select the sort of stuff he wants to read; we know that no one reads everything in the sheet.

If possible, the head should be clever, though cleverness should be secondary to the main considerations. A constantly advancing art, head-construction has drawn no adequate rewards. The head on a New York newspaper announcing the assassination of President Lincoln was:

They now have classy clothes, a valet between them, a chauffeur, a swank Harlem apartment, and they jingle or crinkle (as they choose) more good U. S. dough-rem than most musical guys ever dream of. Yet they cling to one relic of their poverty and obscurity from the days when they shined shoes, weeded gardens and swept out offices.

It's a $6.50 mail-order guitar. When they chipped in and bought it some years ago, their luck began. They rose to fame on radio, stage and now screen. They could have the highest-priced guitar on the market. But they won't. They have it insured. And they share billing with it—"Four Boys and a Guitar."

FATE'S PAWN?

Mrs. Nora Gardner Reynolds Lufkin. A Mystic Told Her She Would Die in 1932, with a Blue Roadster Closely Connected with the Tragedy.

EARLY last March the beautiful Mrs. Gardner Reynolds, Los Angeles and Pasadena society matron, had just returned from Reno. She felt very youthful and perhaps a trifle giddy, for after a decade of marriage with Dr. Cecil E. Reynolds, internationally famous brain specialist, she had cast off the shackles. The doctor, she had pointed out laughingly, was "too much of a genius to live with any longer."

In this frame of mind, the vivacious divorcee paid a visit to her favorite astrologist, Mrs. Mabel Smith, of Los Angeles. Many people go to astrological prophets without any real belief in the stellar process. Women, particularly, go because the star-readings are usually colored with romance. No truly scientific basis has ever been established for the acceptance of such predictions.

Mrs. Reynolds sat in a chair, a smile lurking in her eyes. The middle-aged astrologist sat at a table to consult the stars. Then, in low tones, a collection of prophecies poured forth. Smiling broadly now, Mrs. Reynolds jotted them down on a scrap of paper. Here is what she wrote:

"March 2, 1932.

"Death, 1932, blue roadster closely connected."

"1933. Fate. Impossible to escape."

"Man darker than myself comes the latter part of '32."

"Act upon intuition."

"Man darker than I means the end in 1932."

"Sell the latter part of Summer to very dark woman."

"Six weeks from now change."

In addition, there was another paragraph of notes general in character. For the seer-service Mrs. Reynolds paid the required fee and returned to her hotel.

Two weeks passed.

Mrs. Reynolds boarded a boat bound for Honolulu. She wanted to rest.

Under the lazy warmth of the Hawaiian sun, the pretty divorcee was introduced to Dr. Dexter Lufkin, a dark-complexioned, dark-haired young physician with an extensive practice in the islands.

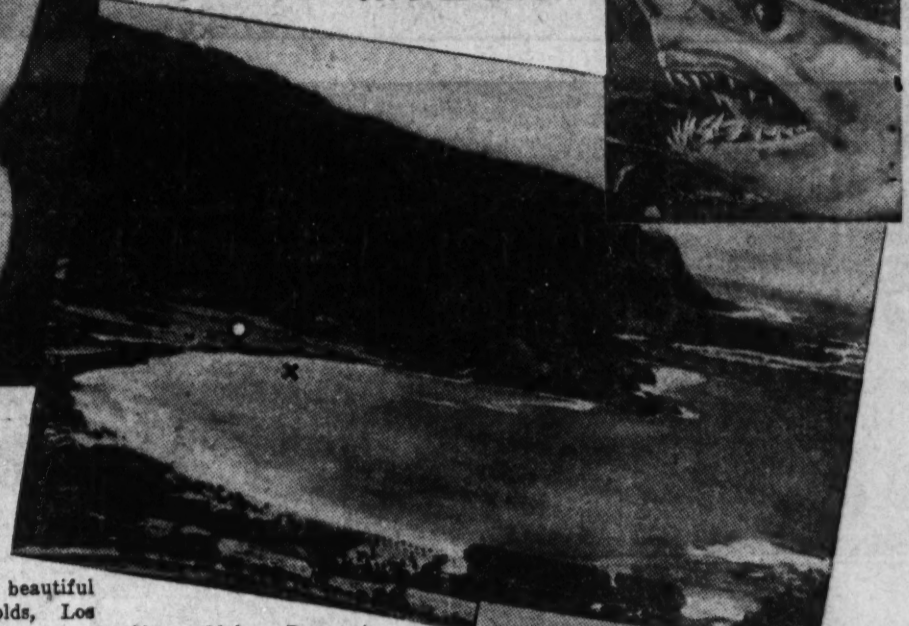

A whirlwind courtship followed. Mrs. Reynolds had forgotten all about the horoscopic reading and the scribbled lines on the scrap of paper which she had left with other belongings in the home of a friend in Los Angeles.

It was May when they decided to get married—the sparkling divorcee and the brilliant young doctor. They traveled back to the mainland, staged the wedding ceremony in Santa Barbara and honeymooned back to Honolulu.

"I'm ecstatically happy," the radiant

Mrs. Lufkin waded into the bay and swam vigorously.

That night Dr. Lufkin found the love nest filled with ominous silence. The evening slipped into the blackest shades of night. The young physician felt an unaccountable tug of terror near his heart. Stark hysteria threatened when he learned his bride of a month had last been seen driving toward Makona Bay, attired for a swim.

A party of friends and neighbors tried to cheer the doctor. Some natives, their eyes keener than the rest, shook their heads and pointed. They saw the fins—indicating the presence of man-eating tiger sharks, skimming through the rolling waters.

The next day a bathing shoe, torn and jagged, was washed ashore. It was one which Mrs. Lufkin had worn the previous day.

The body was never found. There is no scientific basis for believing that the similarity between the circumstances of her death and the terms of the astrological prophecy were more than a coincidence.

But a strange coincidence it was, certainly.

At Right: Edison and Steinmetz, as Artist H. M. Mott-Smith Pictured Them, at the Same Meeting, With the Artist Standing Beside His Canvas.

It has frequently been said that "the most accurate of artists could never match the camera's eye for catching details."

This is no reflection on the fraternity of pen and brush. Imagination is often more attractive than reality. Above these words are two famous pictures of two of the world's most famous men—Edison and Steinmetz. At the left is a photograph. Edison and Steinmetz experimenting together in the latter's laboratory in Schenectady, N. Y., about a year before the scientific wizard's death.

At the right is a painting depicting the same scene. The artist, H. M. Mott-Smith, is standing beside his masterpiece. Tiny differences are apparent between the photographic and the canvas records. But Artist Smith doesn't worry about that. His canvas, recording an occasion which may become immortal, has already been warmly praised. The spirit is there.

Glorified Girls of Other Lands

Terpsichorean Art Is

Temple Worship in Queer Corners of World

A group of temple dancing girls of Madras, India, whose stately dances are part of ceremonies honoring the Hindu gods.

By Whitley Noble

WHAT a dull party it always was in the palace of the sultan until the grand vizier, noticing the expression of boredom on the countenance of his master, would exclaim:

"Bring on the dancers!"

Then life again became a song, heart beats kept time with the rhythm of the dance, and everyone was gay, even the sultan.

The girls, bless them, have been making folks happy ever since long before they chanted and danced in the great halls of the Pharaohs. They have danced and sung empires to glory, and have sung and danced them back to ruin. They have made almost as much history as war, and certainly much pleasanter history. With their dances they made Belshazzar forget that Cyrus the Persian was battering down the gates of Babylon. They danced when civilization was dawning, and they are dancing today, dancing on to soothe the nerves of kings, millionaires, and the tired business men.

Everywhere the girl with the graceful movements of her dance, the beauty of her smile, and the dulcet timbre of her voice, still is making humanity forget the drab things of everyday life. Everywhere the girl is glorified, whether it be upon the stage of a musical comedy, within a pagan temple, on the village green of some remote outlandish crossroads, or deep in the jungles of cannibal land.

Girls of every land simply must dance. They dance for their own entertainment, and they dance to weave their charm over men. They dance as a part of their religious rites. They dance for a smile, for glass beads, for diamonds and sapphires, and for rolls of bank notes. The more civilized the land, the more the girl dances simply for entertainment and for wage. In the most enlightened lands the dance has no part in religious ceremony. It is only where life is at its rawest that the dance is confined to tribal ritual and witch-house hocus pocus.

In Japan it is the geisha girl who dances at banquets, or private or public gatherings. She tells amusing stories as she prepares food for her guest. She sings strange little songs about butterflies and swallows. She plays upon the samisen. She dances queer hippity-hoppety dances. The tired Japanese business men smile blandly.

In the coffee houses of North Africa, in the cities along the coast and in those that hang onto the fringe of the great desert, the Ouled Nail girls, bare-footed and lively, gyrate to the rhythm of the drums for sober-faced sheiks, who sip sickly sweet coffee and nod in the smoke of their water bubble pipes. Far to the south of these favorites of the sheiks, black Bantu girls and woolly haired Kaffir beauties prance about village fires to the monotonous chant of fat mothers whose dancing days are over.

The Scandinavian countries have their favorite dances, in which robust blond maidens keep time to the accordion and the pipes. In Sicily the girls dance gaily. In the Austrian Tyrol and in Switzerland the girls dance with the men in boisterous and riotous steps, and when there are no men about they dance with one another. They enliven their pastime with shrill song and banter. Poland is particularly famous for its many intricate and stately dances, the polonaise, the mazurka, and the polka being among those best known. German girls like to dance and sing, as also do the quaint maidens of Belgium and Holland.

India, though a morose and sober country, has its dances and its dancing girls. In the temples of Madras and other Hindu cities there are trained dancers, who have dedicated their lives to the business of dancing to honor the million Hindu gods. At other places, which are not temples, lighter hearted beauties dance to the thrum of the dol and the wail of the serenadi.

girls perform unique gyrations as an important part of the routine of the temples. They wear high peaked caps and marvelously brocaded garments, and dance with their faces entirely expressionless. Theirs is the dance which was danced by the girls of the mysterious race which built the magnificent jungle city of Angkor, five hundred years ago, and then vanished through the dark trails of the jungle. Decorations upon the crumbling walls of Angkor attest that fact.

The islands of the Pacific furnish ideal settings for the captivating dances of the beauties of Hawaii, of the Samoas, and of the hundreds of other splashes of land that lie in the wide South Sea. The grass-skirted hula dancer of Hawaii is a well known type. Her fiery dance originated in the languorous movements of tribal rites of long ago. In Melanesia head-hunter girls dance for gruesome trophies, as Salome danced for the head of the Baptist.

OMAN: A DESERT SUFFERS A SUPER-DROUTH

ALTHOUGH Oman normally is one of the world's arid countries, it now is suffering such an acute dry spell that it wins a place in the news headlines.

"Oman is the largest of the 'strip countries' that fringe the southern part of Arabia, with the sands of the vast Arabian desert at their back doors," says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic Society.

"The Portuguese, first Europeans to land on the shore of Oman, occupied Muscat, the capital, in 1508, but Oman still is one of the railroadless nations of the world. Good highways are rare and primitive customs of pre-Portuguese days prevail.

"The 'garden of Oman,' a somewhat fertile plot stretching along the Gulf of Oman, is cultivated with crude farming implements; camels have no competition on the trade routes of the interior; and among the native tribes in the interior the sultan's influence is scarcely felt.

"Oman once was a part of a great empire which spread over a larger area of the Arabian peninsula than it now occupies. Its sultans also ruled a part of southern Persia and a strip of the east coast of Africa. Today its J-shaped area ranges in width from 30 to 250 miles. Its coast line, if straightened and placed on a map of the Atlantic seaboard of the United States, would stretch from Boston harbor to Cape Hatteras.

"While its area is about twice that of Ohio, its barren, sun-parched hills thrust tawny summits above sandy deserts. Here and there small plots in the valleys have yielded to cultivation where primitive irrigation systems have been installed.

"The remains of Rostak, ancient inland capital and former chief commercial center, recall the days when the sea was practically ignored by Oman traders. The business eye was focused on the caravan routes whence came the bulk of Oman trade.

"Europeans literally made Muscat. European ships sailing into the harbor of the new port laden with merchandise caused Rostak businessmen to about face from the caravan routes and Muscat slowly absorbed the old capital's prestige.

"Muscat, with 20,000 inhabitants, now is the largest city in Oman and has one of the finest harbors on the Oman coast. But its good commercial reputation is somewhat fictitious. The city is built under the precipitous sides of a mountain range and is unapproachable directly by caravan from the interior. Muscat, a mile and a half up the coast is the nearest point to Muscat which is accessible to the inland traders, so this small town is really the commercial district of the capital.

"Oman has only a half million inhabitants. The natives of the interior are largely nomads of pure Arab stock but in the coast towns travelers rub elbows with individuals of mixed blood. In Muscat streets one frequently meets swarthy natives whose physical features are a combination of Arab and negro. They are the offsprings of Arabs and former African slaves.

"Oman was occupied by the Portuguese from 1508 to the middle of the seventeenth century when Ahmed bin Sa'eed, a Yemenite from the other side of the peninsula, drove the Europeans out of the country. Oman's government now is 'under the wing' of India with which most of its trade is carried on."

HORSE THIEF TRAIL

By FREDERICK R. BECHDOLT

SYNOPSIS

Dick Lee, living alone on a Utah ranch, raising horses for a nearby army post, is startled by horse thieves one night. His fine hand is driven away. The thieves escape, but he follows their trail. On Diamond mountain he is caught in a blizzard. While making camp a beautiful young woman walks into his shelter and says she has lost her way. He shares his food with her but his camp is blown down in the storm. Dick finds a cabin on the ridge and he and the girl take shelter in it. She tells Dick that she is Judith Rose, adopted daughter of Old Man Rose, a notorious character of the valley. Dick suspects Old Rose and his two half-bred sons, Henry and George, are the horse thieves he is after. After a year in school all the money changed to her on her return. George makes advances to her which she repulses.

INSTALLMENT III

THE knowledge of her own utter helplessness, the sight of that dark fat face looking down into her own, left Judith limp. But only for an instant. Then she knew the strength that comes with desperation.

And when that strength came to her she saw the face pause in its downward movement; the eyes went wide, and the loose lips clamped tight; and the huge bulk of George's body straightened. He glanced around, over his shoulder.

They were close to the bank, the two of them; the stream ran swift and deep almost beneath them. And as she felt that relaxation of his crushing strength, Judith threw all of her weight upward against him. It caught him unprepared and, for the fraction of a second, he was on the bank's edge, struggling to hold his balance. Then he plunged into the water and it closed over him.

Judith was on her feet; she had the dangling reins in her hand and her foot was in the stirrup before she learned what had taken place to turn the half-bred's purpose from her. There was a wide thicket of wild plum brush on the opposite side of the creek; it hid the road for a good fifty yards; and she could hear the dull tramp of a horse over there; she had a glimpse of the animal; the rider's head came into sight and disappeared. She knew that battered hat and the splash of copper colored hair, gleaming where a patch of sunlight caught it.

And now her cheeks were flaming with shame; she leaped into the saddle and rode away. The stream of little trees had hidden the creek and all that lay beyond from Dick Lee; and the first suspicion of others nearby had come to him, when his horse threw up its head and nickered loudly. It was that sound which had halted George. Now the latter was crawling up the bank, and the water was gushing from his sodden clothes. He passed his hands across his eyes to free them from the rivulets that oozed over them.

So, riding on past the final fringe of the entangled branches, Dick reached the stream's edge and discovered both of them; Judith in full flight across the level grasslands, bending low along her horse's back; the fat man standing on the bank, his lips twisted with rage. Dick pulled up at the brink.

The two men looked into each other's eyes; the one in wonderment, the other in a sudden growing hate. Dick's lids lowered; his brows drew together when he saw that scowl. No word was spoken. George turned and caught up his horse. He swung into the saddle and dug in the spurs. Dick watched him gallop off up the road toward the ranch house.

He followed, keeping his horse to a walk.

And while he traveled on across the level bottom lands, all ashen with the green film of the young grass, he watched Judith. At last she and her animal were blended by the distance into a single form, bearing the cluster of the ranch buildings on the little hill in the background.

Last night Dick had slept at the ferry; and this morning the ferrywoman had stood in her doorway watching him saddle up, and when he was about to mount—after Pete, the grizzled old half-bred, had slouched away—she had come to his side and said:

"You didn't see a soul up on that Diamond mountain. Remember that."

And while he stood there puzzled, with the stirrup in his hand, she had gone on in the same flat voice:

"It's for Judith's sake I'm telling you."

Then he understood.

And during all the morning he had been riding with Judith in his thoughts.

There was one thing of which he was absolutely certain; he was sure of it ever since he discovered the dead horse on the mountain, with his brand upon its hip. This brand among the snow peaks into which he had come was no place for heedless action or idle talk.

So he rode on slowly over his last five miles and when he reached the bottom of the little hill he saw three men sitting on the edge of the porch before the ranch house. And one of them was the fat man whom he had discovered dripping on the creek bank; his clothes were steaming in the warm sunshine. That pair beside him, Dick told himself, should be the Old Man Rose and the other of his half-bred sons. They were talking in low tones among themselves and their eyes were upon him. Here at the bottom of the hill above a hitching rack. Dick swung from the saddle and threw his reins over it. Judith's horse and the fat man's animal stood there stamping flies. But of the girl he saw no sign.

He walked up the path, sensible of the trio's hard, silent regard. It was, he felt, as if those three pairs of eyes were trying to read his thoughts. None of them spoke until he had halted before them and uttered the time-worn greeting of the open range.

"Howdy."

It was the Old Man Rose who answered.

"Where are you from?"

"Rosebud was the last stop," Dick's voice was serene. "I rode down from the Snake river country. Done lost my pack horse up on the Diamond mountain the other night."

He was looking at the father while he spoke but he could feel George's gaze upon him. And it was the latter who took up the questioning.

"Where'd you make camp?" His voice was indifferent but his eyes were narrow. Bob regarded him blandly.

"One of those little meadows. Kept me busy chopping ditch pine, and I nearly froze." He saw the door behind the three men swing open an inch or two and the knowledge of who was listening there gave him the resolution to lie on.

"My horses strayed away and I was all day yesterday finding this one."

He waited himself upon the porch beside the Old Man Rose.

"I ran across a dead saddle horse up there," he continued. "From the looks of it a mountain lion done the killing. The woman at the ferry told me it belongs to your cousin. Big bay with a Laxy H brand on the hip."

"My boss," Henry was speaking, and he was scowling. "I done told you not to take him to Rosebud, George." His brother answered with profane defiance and the Old Man Rose raised his hand to silence him.

"Horse," said he, "is plentiful. An' you two needsn't go to fightin' over a dead broncho. Long as Jude got through it don't matter."

"Not to you," Henry growled, "but me, I'm out a good fifty dollars."

His father turned the conversation back into its original channel by demanding abruptly of Dick:

"How come you're headin' this way?"

"They told me down in Rosebud you might want a hand," Bob said. "I reckon," the Old Man Rose replied slowly, "somebody was tryin' to play a joke on you."

It might have been those words that brought an idea to Henry; for as a rule ideas came slowly to him. His voice was soft and his manner was altogether casual when he spoke.

"You can ride?"

And hearing that question, the other two exchanged a silent smile.

"I can ride some," Dick answered quietly.

"There is," he said, "a bunch of colts I want to drive in before dinner time. Let's see what you can do." He rose and started down the hill.

"That horse of yours," he remarked negligently, "looks jaded. You ought to rope up another and put your saddle on him."

Dick was at the gate and his pony was unsaddled before he was aware that the Old Man Rose and George were coming and that Judith was behind them.

Still he had no suspicion of Henry's little jest; and he followed the latter inside the pen, his rawhide rope coiled in his left hand, its wide loop trailing in his right. Half a dozen horses were within the inclosure; they had started trotting around his head as he entered the pen. The half-bred swung his reins and it settled over a sleek bay. He led the animal outside and, as he passed through the gate, he said over his shoulder:

"Better take that roan." And then he smiled. It was an afterthought, "he's ticky."

The horses trotted around in a wide circle, tossing their heads; Dick singled out the roan, a rawboned brute and bigger than the average. He flipped his loop from the earth and placed it around the horse's back and it went in a low arc to his mark. He settled back, digging in his high heels, and brought the captive to a stop. And as he was leading him out of the corral he heard Old Man Rose saying to George:

"Henry was elaborately busy over his latrine; and Dick went to the work of saddling. By the time he had his cinches knotted the half-bred was mounting; the other two men had withdrawn a few paces; he glanced across the horse's back and Judith's eyes met his. She was standing near the hitching rack, and he saw that the color had left her cheeks; there was something in her face that made him take thought for the first time since he had come down to the corral.

Was she trying to warn him? He was, so far as horses went, an old hand; and therefore he knew that there is no such thing as asking questions of one's self after one had topped an animal. For by that time in case there is any uncertainty of issue—the answer has already come. He did not hesitate; there was no loss of movement; he turned his stirrup and he placed his foot in it, and he leaped into the saddle. It was perhaps as quick a mount as he had ever made. And his quickness saved him.

The roan's first jump was well begun before Dick settled down; his right foot barely found the heavy stirrup and that was all. And now he knew that this was no case of a few stiff-legged bucks, before the saddle blankets have warmed; he was contending with one of those animals that have grown canny in the rough game, whose hearts have grown wicked from fighting abusive men; one of those brutes whose instincts do not cease at the idea of throwing the rider, but include death or broken bones.

There was a devilish ferocity in the roan's pitching which made him sure of this; a heavy jarring impact when the hoofs came down; a lurching suddenness in the upward spring; which proclaimed the outlaw horse. This in the first three or four bucks; and if Dick had not known by the manner of the beginning that the fight was to be a long one, he would have learned it by the demeanor of the audience. He had a glimpse of Henry through the haze of rising dust; the half-bred had swung from the saddle and was climbing the corral fence, to get a better vantage point; and in the next moment Dick saw the other two men perched beside him on the top-most rail.

Now the roan was twisting—"swapping ends," as the vernacular describes it—and what ever was going on beyond the swirling fog of dust, within whose center he was being tossed about like a cork riding angry waters, might as well have been transpiring beyond the horizon for all that Dick could see it.

The scrapping of the hoofs upon the earth; the creak of saddle leather, and the moaning bellow of the horse; the back rending wench which came with every new movement.

There was a sick instant, whose passing seemed terribly slow, during which he felt his head bowing forward, snapping back again; and his back growing limp. How he stifled his body to renewed firmness he did not know. But in the next moment he was still here, within the tossing saddle, and the animal was still under him.

And soon after that he saw the heavy rails of the corral fence sweeping closer through the thick dust. He lifted his leg free just in time to save himself. The broken bone and the roan crashed against the barrier. It leaped away and Dick's foot shot back again into the stirrup.

At the foot of the hill Judith stood beside the hitching rack; she did not know that both hands were at her breasts; that her face was pale and die up another horse," he answered sullenly.

"The one I'm on suits me," Dick told him quietly.

The Old Man Rose made no comment, but when the pair had departed at the running walk he nodded at his elder son. It was the first time since Judith's return that George had seen him smile.

"Henry had better mind his step," he remarked grimly. "That there young feller is able to look out for himself."

"Which," it would suit me just as well if he wasn't," George growled. "How do we know what he's after? His line of talk sounds fishy to me. I like to get acquainted with a man before I give him a job on this here ranch. There's too many people in the country getting interested in what's going on in Deep Valley."

"Mebbe there wouldn't be so many of 'em if you and Henry would get shut of some of your friends," his father retorted virtuously. "This place is nothing but a pasture for stolen horses the last few years. It keeps me broke, putting up half for your gang. And, as for this one," he pointed at Dick, "why if he ain't on the square he's going to show it sooner or later—and he'll be out of luck right then."

The other said nothing to that. He was thinking of Judith standing by the hitching rack with her hands upon her breasts, her face as white as paper, and her eyes wide with fear. And he was reflecting:

"A girl don't act like that for a man she's never seen before. Ma, I'll keep my eyes open."

He did so all that day, and by the very process of his espionage he fed his soul more venom; but otherwise he attained no results. For the new word seemed to be working overtime at minding his own business; and even Henry, with whom he rode absolutely and she looked away toward the yellow patch of light from the living room window. And then she went on swiftly, "It's all so different since I've come back. Sometimes I wish I'd stayed away from them."

She turned her head and when she looked back to him again he saw that the color had left her face.

"I thought I heard some one," she whispered. "I must go now."

And with those words she left him.

He stood there looking after her until her form had melted into the grayness of the twilight. Then he stepped forth from the doorway to search for the intruder, but no one was in sight.

And while he was peering through the dusk George, who had slunk back from the spot where he had been spying on them, was making his way around the corral in silence. Some time later he followed Judith slowly up the hill.

"I could tell the old man now," he was reflecting. "And if I did—"

He pondered over the project. This business of informing another to action was after his liking. And all it needed was to drop a word or two. Just a hint and that was enough.

But if he did—then when the consequences came of it—and when Judith learned that he had spoken—as she would be sure to learn—then Judith could talk, too.

He had forgotten that. Better to wait until some other more fitting opportunity developed.

While he was telling himself this he entered the living room. His father and his brother were sitting at the old-fashioned covered table. The former glanced up and, seeing who it was, went on talking about some young stock in the bottomlands.

"No reason you can't move them steers up into the first hills right now," he was saying.

"How about that dead horse of mine up on the Diamond?" Henry demanded. "Somebody's got to go and get the rig off of him."

"Allus some excuse for dodging the work," the Old Man Rose growled. "If I didn't keep on the job you fellows would have the low country eat of bare before summer."

"All right," Henry grinned, "it's Jude's rig on that carcass. Leave it for all I care."

His father remained silent for some time studying the table as if he had been as much puzzled by him. It was with reluctance that he yielded the point. One of his cardinal principles, born of necessity of self-defense, was never to acknowledge that either of his sons was right.

"I reckon," he admitted finally, "somebody's got to go."

While he was speaking Judith entered the room.

"Not that I want to make the ride," Henry said, "and besides I dunno where the horse is laying."

Judith halted and George's eyes grew wide as he looked at her face. It remained without expression.

"I'll send the new hand," the Old Man Rose answered, "he knows the place."

Still watching, George saw the girl draw in a deep quick breath. Then she went on into her room. He remained silent, the fat elder son remained silent. What he had seen this evening down there by the bunkhouse had confirmed his suspicions—suspicions of the truth and suspicions born of his own gross nature, which went on beyond that.

"And now," he was telling himself, "she's going up there to meet him again."

It happened that Henry had been down to the corral the next morning before breakfast and during the progress of that cheerless meal he took occasion to remark upon a discovery which he had made.

"George has pulled out," he told his father, "and as usual he's took the horse I figured on riding today."

Now for more than one reason which he had not troubled himself to examine into Dick had been standing by the hitching rack when he had seen the fat man; moreover he was abiding by the advice which Jack Flood had given him that morning weeks before when he had set out after his stolen horse; his eyes and ears were open and his nature, which went on beyond that, was alertly taking note of the information of George's departure and kept it in the back of his mind. Otherwise he might have taken no account of the tracks which he saw on the road ahead of him a little later.

The blind chance which had turned his attention to this fact was not yet done with him. It was still present when he came down to the corral to catch up his horses, one for himself, the other to carry home the saddle of the dead animal from the Diamond mountain. Henry was standing by when he flung his loop at a shining bay which was trotting in the midst of the circling band around the edges of the railed pen. It was one of the few times when Dick had to acknowledge making a bad throw. Instead of settling down over the bay's upsteeled head, the rawhide rope glanced aside and, by a freak, it rebounded directly in front of the big roan upon whose back he had battled for life and limb yesterday. The animal's head forward at the moment and it shot into the outspread noose. Henry chuckled.

"Done caught himself," he said. Dick remained silent and dug in the high heels of his boots, the reata came taut, he drew the roan to a halt.

from the time when he had seen George before Dick returned to the place where he had left his horse. He swung into the saddle and had covered half the distance between the creek crossing and the ferry when he heard the thudding of hoofs behind him. He pulled up and eased his rifle looser in its sheath; but the only weapon which George carried now was his sixshooter.

"Me, I was waiting for you at the creek," he announced blandly.

"My horse got to fussing. I reckon he smelt something he didn't like. So I let him go downstream for fear he'd go to bucking in that thick brush."

If Dick's answer begot any doubts as to its truth the fat man managed to conceal them; his face remained as expressionless as a full moon. And now the two of them rode side by side. And when the mount of either showed a desire to forge on ahead—which happened more than once, for both horses were fresh and eager with the coolness of the morning—his rider took good care to rein him back. There was also a mutual disposition toward keeping the right hands unemployed—and within easy distance of the big revolver butts that hung beside the thighs. So they traveled on in silence, each of them busy with his own thoughts, and although their eyes might seem to wander sometimes, neither missed the slightest movement that the other made.

It was with a feeling of relief that Dick saw the ferrywoman's little cabin before them on the river's muddy bank. Waiting was never an easy game for him to play.

"And now," he told himself, "he's got to show his hand."

The cabin door was closed. No smoke came from the chimney. They rode together to the edge of the steep bank. The ferry was on the other side and no one was on board. If Dick had been looking then he would have caught the sudden change that came into the fat man's face; his eyes moved quickly, taking in the situation; and then grew narrow for an instant as with a swift determination. They had shouted several times without getting any answer.

"No tellin' when she will be back," George announced. "She's crazy as a scalded cat." After a moment he added, "This is as far as I'm going, anyhow." He reined his horse about and started off. "You'll find a better crossin' half a mile down, just this side of that dead cottonwood."

He called the directions over his shoulder without halting.

Dick watched him until he had gone a good hundred yards. During that time George did not so much as turn his head to look back.

The dead cottonwood leaned over the stream at the beginning of a sharp turn. Below that point the river was hidden; but as Dick neared the place he had a glimpse of red cliffs that loomed into the sky; then the budding foliage of the cottonwoods and willows came between him and those blood-colored portals. He might have given more thought to them if he had been familiar with Deep Valley—and if his mind had not been on the fat man. As it was he turned in the saddle once more to match this other. George was still riding slowly with his back to the river.

Dick touched the horse with the spurs and traversed the last fifty yards to the point. The roan struck out into the stream. The pack horse followed reluctantly. Here near the bank the water was shallow, and the depth increased slowly. Both animals were splashing noisily; and the sound was accompanied by a deeper one—a low humming that seemed to fill the air. They went past the end of the point where the cottonwood leaned out; and now they were swimming.

The river flashed into sight below them. Rapid waters churned to white foam between the blood red cliffs that rose like the portals of a huge gateway. Beyond the cliffs it vanished in the depths of a gorge; from which there came the thunder of the torrent compressed between sheer walls.

It was perhaps three hundred yards to these fringes of foam that topped the first combers of the rapids.

Dick glanced back over his shoulder. The dead cottonwood was already behind him—they were being carried downstream. And in the glance he got a glimpse of George. The fat man had turned his horse and was watching him.

The roan was swimming hard. They were well out in the river now and the full force of the current caught them. It swept them more swiftly toward the gateway of the red cliffs. He let go the rope that held the lead horse and centered his thoughts upon the trap into which he had been lured.

Sitting at ease in his saddle, with one fat leg thrown over the horn to rest himself, George took in the spectacle from the rise of land back of the ferrywoman's cabin. Only the roan's head and outstretched neck showed; and the form of the rider leaning forward. Then they were swept on around the bend.

"Well, that's goodbye for you," George said. He rode to the stream by the ferry landing. He urged his horse down the bank and swam him across the placid current here.

His animal gained the shallows and climbed out upon the further bank. He let it rest for a few moments.

From where he was looking the lower reaches of the river were pretty well hidden by the point on the end of which the dead cottonwood stood. Once as he waited George thought he heard a shout down there; but the dull booming of the rapids closed in over the sound.

"And if he was on the best horse that ever swam he couldn't make that bank," he told himself. Then he started up the long sign-sag trail that climbed the Diamond mountain.

Baron Oppenheim's TELL HALAF

The great double statue, one of the important works of art recovered from the Tell Halaf ruins.

By John A. Menaugh

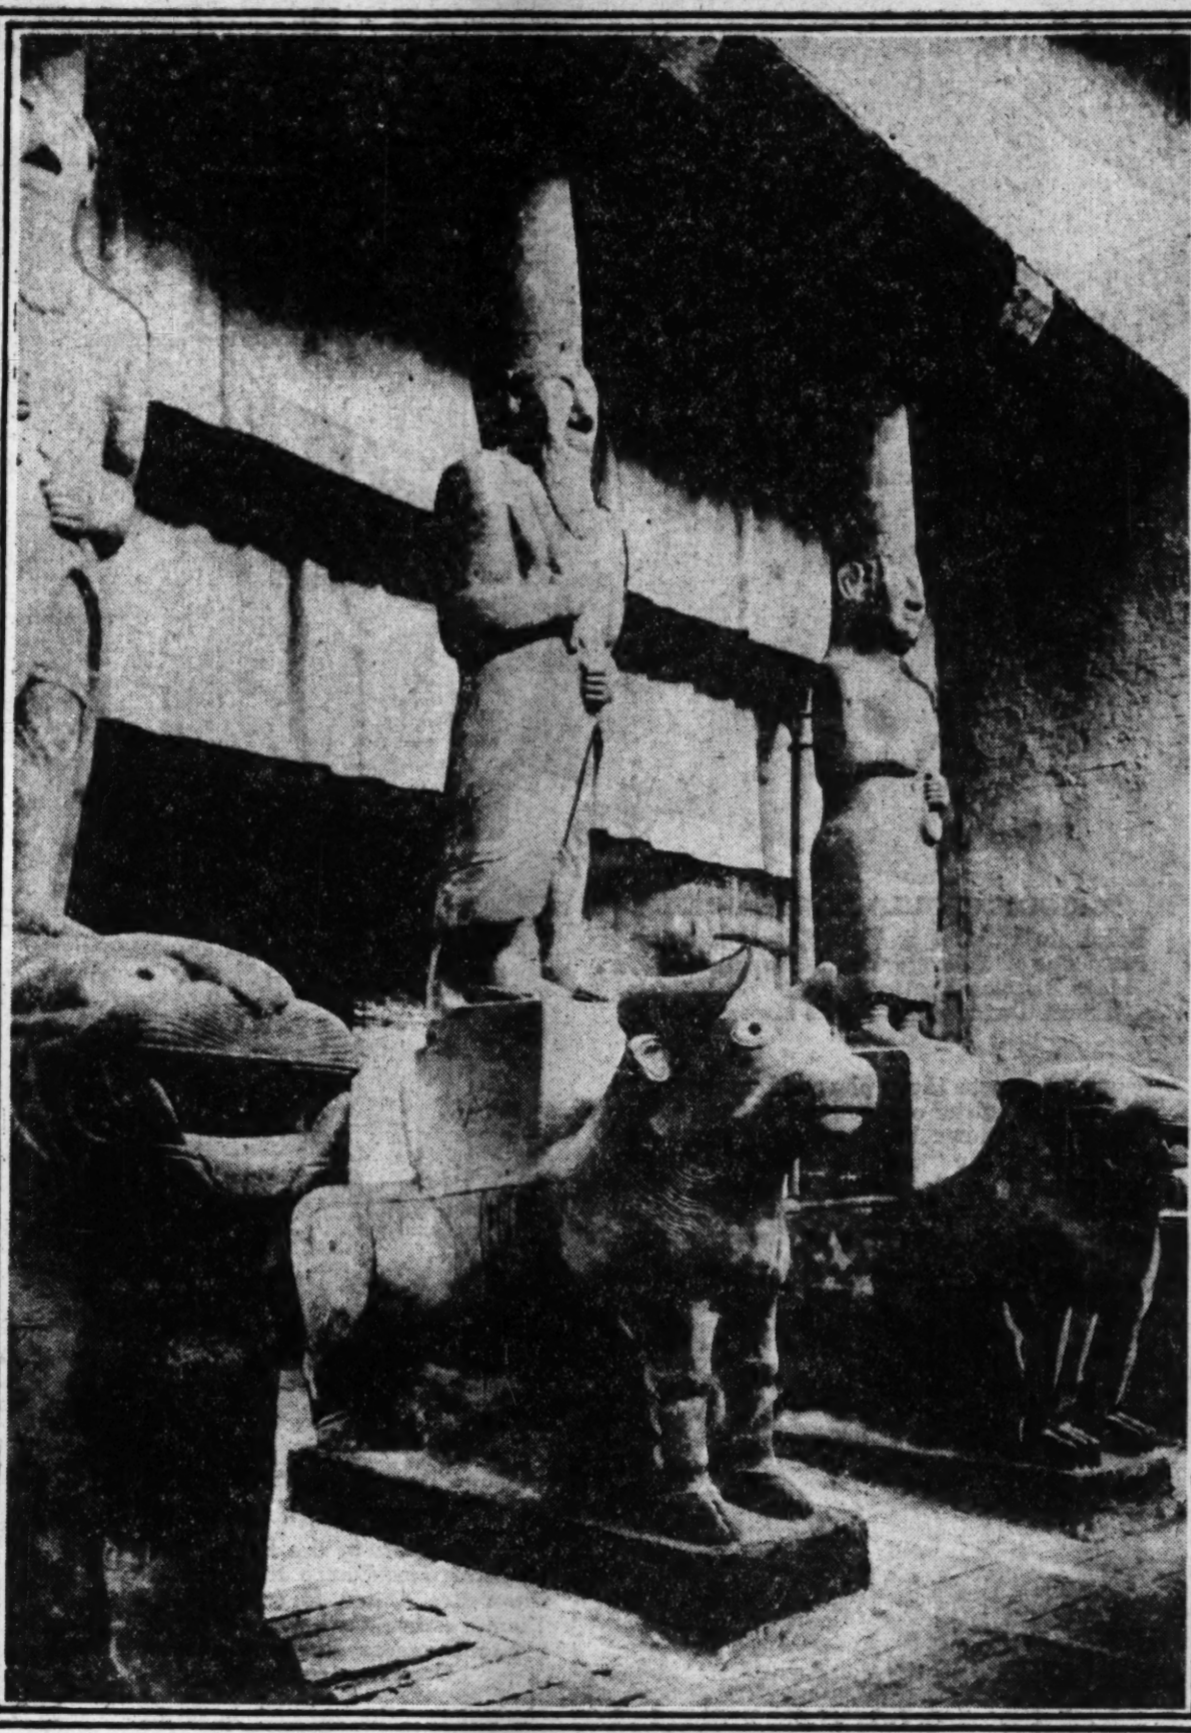

A GENTLEMAN of the old school, gallant and courteous, a former diplomat in the service of the government of Germany, is traveling about the world today telling the world of a strange ancient city uncovered in the desert of Upper Mesopotamia. The city of the ancients is Tell Halaf, and Dr. Baron Max von Oppenheim speaks of it proudly as "my Tell Halaf," for it was through his efforts in archeological discovery and through the financing of an expedition at his expense that the story of this city, one of the oldest in the world, was recaptured for modern study.

Excavations carried out through a period of years upon the site of this center of possibly the oldest of cultures have yielded rich treasures in the form of stone sculptures of the most fantastic nature and of tremendous dimensions. Baron von Oppenheim places the age of Tell Halaf at between 5,000 and 6,000 years, certainly more than 5,000 years. The name Tell Halaf, of course, is modern, having been applied in recent years to the mound beneath which the ancient city, or group of ancient cities, lay for centuries. The baron chooses to call the mound and the oldest of the cities Tell Halaf. He believes that the lowest level at which his workmen found ruins of temples and huge stone images dates back to a period as ancient as the pre-dynastic and the early dynastic times of Egypt. He believes that the oldest relics from Tell Halaf parallel in time the earliest Sumerian and the pre-Sumerian cultures. Reliefs and full sculptures taken from the depths beneath the mound of Tell Halaf were carved by men who had no written language. They told their stories in pictures, years and years before writing appeared upon the world.

The baron is of the opinion that the earliest people who inhabited Tell Halaf were swarthy people with aquiline noses. He thinks they were of the same general group as those who inhabited Palestine before the days of the Jews. He further believes the Jews assimilated these mysterious ancients.

The story of the discovery of Tell Halaf and its subsequent excavation is a romantic one. From his youth the baron had been a student of archeology, though he entered the more worldly profession of diplomacy. He continued his studies, however, and when offered the opportunity to travel in the near east, the region of the oldest of civilizations, he applied himself diligently to field observations. While serving as German minister plenipotentiary at Cairo, Egypt, the baron, on one of his exploring expeditions, discovered the mound of Tell Halaf, in Syria, about half way between the modern cities of Aleppo and Mosul. Later, from 1902 to 1904, the baron served as counselor of the German embassy in Washington. Actual excavations were not begun at Tell Halaf until 1911.

The discovery of Tell Halaf came about in an unusual way. The baron was pursuing his hobby of archeology in the desert east of Aleppo during a vacation period in 1899. He had made friends with the Bedouin tribesmen of that region and was living in their midst when he heard a rumor which came from a village a distance of five days' travel. The rumor was to the effect that a Bedouin youth in digging a grave in which to bury his father had unearthed a curious stone figure. Baron von Oppenheim tracked the rumor down and came upon the mound of Tell Halaf. The Bedouins threatened his life for disturbing the serenity of the village and for upsetting their old traditions that ancient ruins should not be touched. But the baron bared his breast and told the Bedouins to kill him. This bold stroke won the admiration of the villagers, who not only spared his life but became his devoted friends and assisted him in his work of examining the site of the ancient city.

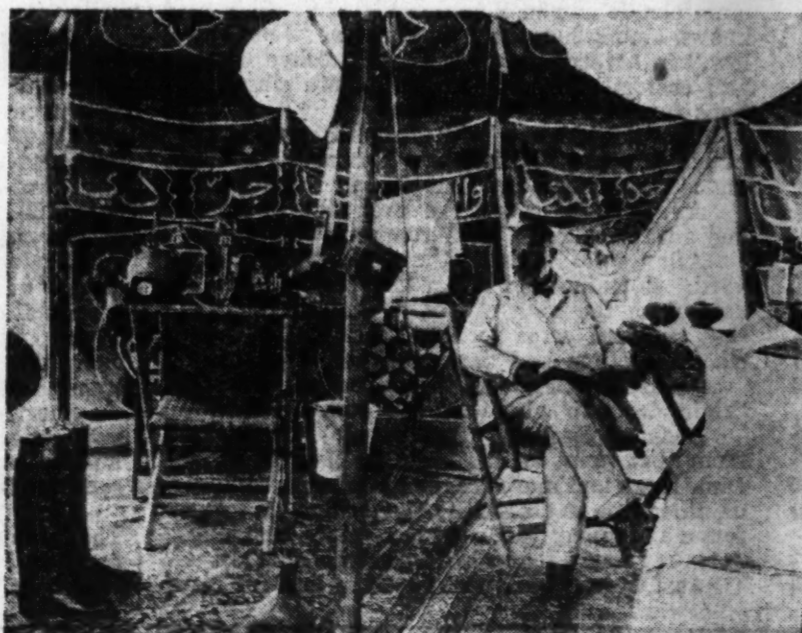

Colossal facade of the temple-palace of ancient Tell Halaf, with the three great deities standing upon the backs of their sacred animals. These images, once worshiped by an ancient people, are now in Baron von Oppenheim's Berlin museum.

It was at that time that Baron von Oppenheim laid plans for the complete excavation of the ancient mound. Though the Bedouins of that region were desperate men, levying on caravans, raiding villages, and killing with little thought of any possible consequence, the baron won them over by a frank show of real

The sculptures of this oldest of several layers of ancient cities presented art in its most primitive form, great statues displaying the extreme in realistic strength, and relief sculptures rich in naturalism. The caryatids of this ancient city were the grandfathers of all caryatids. There were the carved images of the ancient rain god, those of the sun god, the male sphinx, the cherubs or winged bulls, life-like reproductions of the lions that once roamed the plains of Mesopotamia, gigantic griffons, and a vast assortment of major and minor gods, some in full figures and others in reliefs.

Some of the statues seemed absolutely cubistic in design, while the style of the animal sculpture was found to be far superior to that depicting human life. The fighting and hunting scenes were in the most archaic style, at the same time being dramatically alive. The facade of the Tell Halaf palace amazed the archeologists, who looked with awe upon the three gigantic deities guarding the palace entrance.

Through permission of the Syrian government Baron von Oppenheim was able to transport many of the ancient works of art to Europe, and in Berlin he has established a museum which contains many of the more important of the sculptures of Tell Halaf. The baron plans a return to Tell Halaf soon to take up the excavations which were interrupted by the World war.

friendship. The Bedouins, once they had become his friends, proved to be kind and loyal, and it was only through their help later that he was able to carry on his work in that locality.

At the termination of Baron von Oppenheim's career in the German diplomatic service he undertook the task of digging into the secrets of Tell Halaf. It was in 1911 that work on the site of the old city was begun. The baron organized a camel caravan at Aleppo and set out upon a twenty-day journey to the scene of his discovery. Nowadays trains make the trip in 14 hours. There were 1,000 camels in the caravan, and all food and supplies of every nature had to be carried across the parching desert on the backs of the plodding beasts. The trip across the sands, which included a great detour, at last was accomplished, and the baron, assisted by his European staff, set 550 natives at work with hoes and baskets, clearing away the sands which buried the ancient city. The work was carried on without any lengthy interruption until 1914, when the World war brought a stop to the excavations.

Though there was a small oasis and a spring at the base of the mound of Tell Halaf, the Europeans on the expedition suffered terribly. The heat was terrific and the mosquitoes voracious. Besides the baron there were ten other Germans in the party and four from other European countries. The baron lost one of his German companions through fever, four others had to be sent home and replaced, and the baron himself had a hard struggle with death for several weeks. One of his European assistants was slain in an attack by Bedouins unfriendly to those who were assisting in the operations at Tell Halaf. The friendly Bedouins had been carrying on a feud for five generations with a distant tribe, and it was a flare-up of this feud that brought the raid on the Tell Halaf camp. The country now is under a French mandate, and efforts have been made to put an end to the desert feuds.

The excavations were remarkably successful. While the tombs of the early Egyptian kings and the royal Sumerian tombs of Ur of the Chaldees have been found to be rich in the smaller objects of fine art, the Tell Halaf ruins proved to be rich in stone sculptures of unusual and fantastic design and of huge proportions. The workmen in removing the sand from the old mound first came upon the ruins of an Arabian city of the early ninth century, when Harun-al-Raschid was the grand caliph of all Islam. Later they dug down to an ancient Greco-Roman city, easily identified by relics of those people and those times. Then the remains of an Assyrian city were reached as the excavators went farther into the depths of the desert. Under the ruins of the Assyrian city were those of a city of pre-Assyrian times, and beneath all lay the magnificent ancient center of culture which the baron calls "my Tell Halaf."

THINKING WHAT?

Anita Alvarez, Dark-Eyed Beauty With the Spanish Love of Dance in Her Veins. She Was a Hostess at a Broadway Taxi-Dance Hall.

IN the kaleidoscope of 1932 big-city life, with its never-diminishing excitement, one institution, radically new in its present form, stands out. This is the taxi-dance hall. It has put romance on the auction-block at cut-rate prices. It has given to the largest cities a problem as perplexing as it is fascinating.

For fifteen years there have been halls where men could go, buy tickets, and dance with a choice of partners in the employ of the management for a ticket a dance. But for an equal period the girls who constituted the principal lure in such places were pitted for their low estate, while many patrons listed their visits there as "slumming."

But conditions have changed. In the cities are many beautiful girls who in normal times would be in glamorous "girl shows." The stage wanted them, but couldn't pay them. For this sizeable feminine army the problem of existence recently became acute.

Secretly, at first, the lonely one-time beauty queens descended upon the taxi-dance halls. Soon they flocked there in profusion.

Alert on the trail of beauty, the young-men-in-search-of-romance soon found the new haunts. Then came the college boys and the dashing young scions of wealth. Impetuous young love flourished. Several times in succession, Cinderella romances involving pretty hostesses and society's sons astonished the "400."

This article is the second of a series by John D. Greene, New York reporter and investigator, who has personally surveyed the taxi-dance hall scene for the readers of this magazine.

IT WAS a big day for Allan P. Carlisle, youngest son of Social Registerites Jay F. and Mary Pinkerton Carlisle, of the Hotel Vanderbilt, when he decided to "go Broadway" on his 1931 Easter vacation from classes at Harvard.

For thus, with a single stroke, when he checked his topcoat in a taxi-dance palace he severed the ties which had bound him to a sheltered home life. In the space of a few hours he laid the foundation for an adventure which was to take him out of the somewhat cloistered existence of a scion of great wealth and land him in the world of those who work for their living and live on what they earn. How the "big day" will turn out remains to be seen.

Like some other youths accustomed to a life of luxury, young Allan Carlisle did not particularly take to the girls of his own class. They bored him. Down deep in his heart Allen yearned for the companionship of one who was beautiful, yet unspoiled; given to dreams, yet real.

On the Harvard campus there had been the girls from Radcliffe. There had been the girls from Wellesley. There had been the local girls who lived within the shadow of the brick dormitories along the Charles River, with a traditional distrust of the rich sons of John Harvard.

So conquests of the heart, as extra-curricular activities, did not appeal very strongly to the boy whose father is a millionaire Wall Street broker and whose mother is the granddaughter of Allan Pinkerton, founder of the famous detective agency bearing the family name.

Home for the holidays, pacing the floor of the ultra-fashionable family suite at the hotel, Allan was restless. All the ardor of his nineteen years seemed bottled up. What was there to do?

Suddenly a daring thought came to him. He might go to a taxi-dance hall. The family would raise Cain if they found out, but they needn't find out. He had seen the signs along Broadway, advertising gorgeous girls, sweet young dancing partners—all for ten cents, more or less, a dance.

The family couldn't kick much anyway, young Carlisle reasoned, because there was an excuse to go to those places if you were in the Social Register or a college student. Those columnist fellows had written about other members of the "400" who had been seen dancing with hostesses in those places. And the rule, "It isn't done," loses much of its force when you can point out, "It has been done." It was through an after-theatre crowd that the handsome young scion of the Carlises wound his way to the corner of Forty-sixth Street and Broadway. A saxophone blared overhead. He promptly mounted the stairway.

He may have read about crusades against dance-for-ticket ballrooms as breeding-places of vice. He may have touched briefly on them as a possible social evil in a course in college. So perhaps he was surprised.

Everything in the ballroom looked orderly. No suspicious glances greeted him, although as a stranger he might have expected them. The girls were young and charming, and taken out of the setting might have passed easily for debutantes. They had a spontaneous vivacity which he liked.

Dancing at that time in that particular Broadway palace of Terpsichore was a slim platinum blonde named Romaine Fleming. She was known among her sister hostesses as "Jean Harlow," in accordance with an established dance-hall custom of sorting hostesses into classifications furnished by the talkies.

After a few dances with other hostesses nearer at hand, young Carlisle saw Romaine Fleming, danced with her—and that was all for the time.

All, that is, except the exchange of names and addresses and a brief comparing of notes.

Allan told Romaine that he attended Harvard. Romaine told Allan that she had graduated from the high school in Greensburg, Pa., that she had come to New York in 1930 and since that time had danced at the Orpheum.

"Which brings us," she added sweetly, "right down to where we are now."

Back to Harvard went young Carlisle, but from that point on his visits to New York became more and more frequent. When his classes detained him in classic old Cambridge his letters found their way to Broadway, while Romaine's notes regularly found his dormitory mailbox.

Just before Christmas, 1931, Allan hit New York for the holidays and went immediately to the dance palace. Romaine was waiting for him. They danced. It was the twenty-third of December. Each was still nineteen. On everyone's lips were the strains of "Now's the Time to Fall in Love."

Entrusting the secret only to "Nick" and "Prince," owners and managers of the ballroom, Carlisle and Miss Fleming slipped off the floor, dashed to the street below, jumped into a roadster, and drove to Port Chester, a Gretna Green about twenty-five miles from Broadway.

There they were married. Allan had to go to a Park Avenue party, so Romaine went back to the dance palace. The secret lasted for about three months.

When the elder Carlisle found out, the air was blue up and down New York's gold coast. Allan was yanked out of college. There were threats of "disinheriting." Instead of going to pieces, however, Allan and Romaine took a small apartment in Greenwich Village. Romaine got a part in a Broadway show and Allan went to look for a job. He eventually caught on as a cub reporter on a large metropolitan daily.

Even while the Carlisle-Fleming knot was being tied, another Cinderella marriage secret was being jealously guarded in the same taxi-dance hall.

It was fairly well known to readers of the gossip columns that young Robert Schermerhorn Randolph, Social Registerite and former Yale student, was very fond of the dark-haired Peggy Price, dance hostess. But no one, apparently, guessed that they were married. Miss Price roomed with Beverly Banks, another hostess, who had broken into print a few times as the favorite dancing partner of that young crown prince of the stage, John Drew Colt, Ethel Barrymore's boy.

After Carlisle Came Randolph and Park Avenue Had Another Fit

Then, a few weeks after the Carlisle-Fleming nuptials were bared, society learned that the scion of the Randolphs had been married to the ex-convent girl from Memphis, Tennessee, for eight months! There were reverberations along Park Avenue. Randolph's mother refused to believe that her son had a wife, even though the Upper West Side love nest had been maintained by him since the previous September.

Randolph was earning, at the time of the disclosure of his married state, $10.50 a week as a runner for a Wall Street firm. Peggy Price, having given up her lucrative job at the dance hall, was drawing down fifteen dollars as a stenographer.

Shortly after the first headlines appeared young Randolph lost his Wall Street pittance, and he answered with hints of a family plan to separate him from his pretty bride.

"But," he announced, "we'll get along. They're not going to take my Peggy away from me!"

In the meantime still another taxi-dance ro-

Dance Hall Hostess Says No To Nephew of Siamese King

nance was blazing. Perhaps the most spectacular of them all, defied the axiom that "East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet." It was the now-famous heart episode involving His Royal Highness Ned Suksvasti, Prince of Siam, and little Chick Baker, petite hostess with a penchant for a sweeping jazz step known as the "Collegiate Glide."

Prince Ned is a student at Princeton. He is diminutive, brown-complexioned and affable.
His classmates say he is an excellent student.
Like his distinguished kinsman, King Prajadipok, who was educated at Eton, Ned has been for some years on the trail of a complete Western education.

Miss Baker was born in Tulsa, Oklahoma, on Christmas day, 1913. Her folks are plain, everyday, self-respecting Americans.

Chick's education was divided fairly evenly between the public schools and the studios of dancing instructors. She graduated from Tulsa High School.

Ambitious for the stage, she journeyed to Dallas, Texas, where with her delicate features, slender figure and nimble toes she found work.
Then came a vaudeville job. The arduous life of the four-day might have discouraged a less determined little girl still under eighteen, but Chick plunged into it. She arrived on the White Way in 1930.

A tour of the booking agencies followed.
Little Chick demurely wound her way through the theatrical jungle surrounding Times Square.

Thus far her story was merely a repetition of that which thousands of other girls could tell.

The theatre had fallen on lean days. An impasse had already been raised against beauty.
Broadway was clogged, for the supply of young and delicate pulchritude from the hinterland was already greater than the demand—by more than a hundred per cent.

Then, very unexpectedly, what looked like Chick's big chance came. She could start reharsing for the "Vanities." She was told that while nothing was guaranteed, she might have a chance to show that her dancing was on a par

A Little Chick from the West Finds "Slim Pickin's" on Broadway

It so happened, however, that Chick had come to like New York. And the more she thought of it, the less she thought of the idea of going on the road, even as a special eyeful in an elaborate revue.

She had heard of the taxi-dance halls, had the common sense to distinguish between one kind and another and listened with interest when other girls told about the steady money which they received just for dancing. Never less than thirty dollars a week. Sometimes as much as seventy. Usually at least fifty-five. And all such fun.

So about the time that the first reports of King Prajadipok's 1931 visit to the United States were sweeping into print, Chick Baker walked up to a dance palace, demonstrated to the proprietors that she could step with the best, furnished the names of two reputable citizens as references, went to work.

Just past her eighteenth birthday, she looked even younger. The patrons of a dime-a-dance ballroom always flock to new, fresh faces. The other hostesses smiled as the regular patrons gave Chick "the rush."

But little Chick kept her head. She happened to know that when she accepted a string of tickets her only obligation was to dance. She didn't have to be "nice" to her partners beyond the dance floor. In fact, the rules of the ballroom backed her up in her refusal to meet any of the men on the outside.

"I knew," Chick told this reporter,
"that a boy would come along some day whom I could like. And I was right, wasn't I?"

All this time, little Ned Suksvasti was going to classes and looking at the world through the shop windows on old Nassau Street, in Princeton, and wondering if this occidental world into which he had been sent by his royal Siamese kin was such a great place after all. Ned remembered happier days spent away back Bangkok.

That was just about the time that college boys started to answer the dime-a-dance lure.
And when wonderful stories began to seep back into the dormitories about thrilling nights of dancing with gorgeous girls, Ned's mental picture was intriguing. It sounded grand.

So he felt no embarrassment in taking his royal visage over to Broadway the very next Friday night (for that is when the college contingent fills the dance halls) and accompanying a party of chums to their usual haunt.

Before the evening was over the little oriental prince had found romance and a partner. She was Chick Baker, of course.

But as fortune would have it, the affair reached the ears of the King and Queen.

Some members of the royal household fumed and raged. But King Prajadipok and Rambi Barni, the Queen, took it with comparative calm.
Nevertheless, in a few days Prince Ned received a message through the Siamese legation.

The gist of it was that by order of their royal highnesses, King and Queen, owners of the four-and-twenty umbrellas, Prince Ned Suksvasti was hereby requested and advised not to let his known affection for one Chick Baker pass beyond the stage of friendship!

Both youngsters admitted their mutual interest. But the King had spoken, the King can do no wrong—and Chick, grown philosophical as a hostess, took it with a shrug.

"I wouldn't want to marry Ned if it meant getting him in wrong with the King and Queen," she told reporters. "It wouldn't be right."

Even the recent Siamese revolution hasn't changed her mind.

But they still dance together—these taxi-dance friends. No king, eight thousand miles away, can stop them from doing that.

These three cases are truly representative of a normal dance hall condition at this time, at the "better places."

In a well-run ticket dance palace you can pick one couple out of every five and see something more impressive than a passing interest in the ordinary attitudes of partner and hostess.

Given a girl of some social training (and, broadly speaking, if she has been through high school she has it), earning substantial wages and possessing the not yet antiquated notion that her ultimate object in life is honorable marriage, the prejudice against her occupation is no bar to love and a wedding ring.

But there are places where a girl cannot reconcile a taxi-dancing career to a later place in society. Just as there are caste systems on the stage, there are "aristocrats" and "plebians" among the taxi-dancing sorority.

The slum places are usually characterized by a hostess personnel of older women and young girls who have in some way lost caste and are unable to find employment in a dance hall where references are carefully checked.

To these lower class "hoofers halls" often go petty members of the underworld.

In Some Halls Hostesses Must Call-Their Partners by Pet Names

One of the requirements of the hostess's job is to show at least a small amount of personal interest in her dancing partner. She must call him "Honey," in many places.

Where this artificial affection may lead in the higher class places to desirable marriage, it serves in the slum "joints" only to link the taxi-dancer to unhappiness and often crime through her hall contacts. The murder of Virginia Bran-nen, pretty taxi-dancer who had ventured to New York from a small town in Maine only a few months before her death, illustrates the latent danger. It was fairly well established that she did not realize the crime associations of her slayer, Rudolph "Fat" Durringer—yet her last hours were spent with him in an automobile in which "Two-Gun" Crowley was a passenger.

Dozens of other cases have crept into the headlines. Still other cases never broke into print. Next week I shall touch on them. To go back to the legitimate, or higher-class halls:

The case against the hostess is that she trades essentially on her feminine charms.

The answer to the "trading" charge is that it is woman's prerogative to charm men; that it is her duty in unsettled times to earn her living.

"Society folks," said one Broadway hostess,
"spend thousands of dollars on a coming-out party to put a daughter on the marriage market.
A dance-hostess comes out herself, supports herself, helps herself, helps to support her parents, and—sometimes—gets the very man the debutantes are angling for. So what?"

"That's fine! And I would suggest that you have some of the boys watch both the dug-out on Burney's Field, from which the trail of coins led, and also the range door in the clump of trees."

The idea made a hit with them. We helped, then, in making the rope ladder. I could see after the first 25 feet of it were finished, that it was not going to be long enough, and so we got out some of the short rope ladders that shadow had made for smaller trips in our Cliff Cave, and we tied them all

"Hey! What about me?" called Lige Hobbs, who stood over on the slope, holding the bridles of our ponies.

"You've got to stand guard up here and hold our ponies," I said, "so that we may be off in a hurry, if we have to."

Shadow and Harold had now fastened out a word from anyone. Shad's Loomis was next. I watched them disappear down through the dark holes with some of those little boys who say "you can't be braver nor bolder kids than this night." In order spy system of mine. Harold went next, and I imagined the three of them must be treading on each other's heads as they went down the rope ladder. I would not be sure that the hope adder would hold up under my weight while the other three were on it, and so I turned for an excuse to Lige Hobbs and told him to be sure to stay right where he was, and under no circumstance must he allow any of the ponies to bolt.

I turned back to the hole and saw

"Look!" cried Shadow, excitedly, pointing to the little animal on top of the giant mushroom. "It's Garibaldi—Antonio's monkey! We've got to push on, fellows—we've got to follow through!"

Which we did.

Hints For Flower and Vegetable Gardeners

BY W. ELBRIDGE FREEBORN.

Each time that we stop to think of shade trees we stop to think of the enormous part that they play in the beauty of the home or of the landscape generally. We have often noted as we would drive through the country at the times that people would exclaim over the beauty of the scenery, the oaks and the alders were brought forth in almost every instance at the sight of a beautifully wooded hillside, or at the sight of a stream surrounded by trees, perhaps a mountain home peeping through the trees. Always, however, the trees or shrubs were the central part of the landscape admired.

Except for the lawn itself there is probably no one part of the home planting that arouses more admiration and comment from the passer-by than the beautiful trees there. It is very fortunate that they are more or less trouble free for if this were not the case many of our fine century old trees would not be with us. We have often seen a house in the middle of a large lot without a single tree near it and the thought that we would not like to live in that house has always popped into our mind.

Trees are somewhat of a disadvantage in that they are not able to proclaim their troubles as quickly as some of the other plants and shrubs. As a matter of fact unless we happen to notice them closely it is oftentimes too late to save the tree, in case there is some disease. A good concrete example of this was shown during the summer of 1926. As we all remember the summer of 1925 was one of the hottest in this country that we have ever experienced in Atlanta.

During the late summer that year we all noticed the numbers of shade trees that were dying, not only here in Atlanta but also throughout the country. The strange fact was that the most of the trees that eventually died because of the 1925 drought did not pass out until the following summer. The summer of 1926 did not have normal rainfall but it did have considerably more rain than the previous one.

For two reasons it is then necessary for us to take good care of our shade trees. First, the trees belong to a proud family and will not show their troubles until death has taken them. Second, if we happen to lose one of our fine trees it is next to impossible to replace it. Very few of us can remember the planting of the very fine shade trees that may be seen in and around Atlanta.

In considering the care of shade trees and large shrubs it is well to bear in mind the conditions under which they thrive in the forest. It is always a good rule in growing plants of any kind to attempt to replace the conditions that that particular plant would have in nature's garden.

There in nature, shade trees live almost undisturbed; nature almost never cultivates the roots of her trees. She does prepare a good, rich mulch on top of the soil, which not only feeds the trees constantly but also has an abundance of moisture for their benefit. Except in very rare cases she does not allow any other growth under the tree to be fighting it for the food that is in the soil.

Such is not the case with a shade tree when it lives in our yard. We want a shade tree without any leaves around them, really a life giving mulch to the trees but to us it is ugly trash. We also want grass growing under the trees and very often a border of shrubs close by or perhaps a hedge almost under the tree. This means that the tree must carry on a constant battle with these other plants for the food and water that is found in the soil. These are not natural conditions.

Since we have taken from the tree some of the things that to a tree are absolutely necessary we must attempt in some manner to replace their natural method of feeding and drinking with some other one that will not only hold the life in the tree but that will allow it to grow as it should for a maximum of beauty.

Fertilization of Shade Trees. There are several different methods of fertilizing trees. One of the best methods is to dig a trench under the extremities of the branch spread. This trench is then filled with fertilizer and the trench filled up. This is not to be recommended in most instances as the digging of this trench will destroy a great many of the fine feeding roots. Most of the feeding roots of trees are found at the drip from the branches. Another method commonly followed is that of broadcasting the fertilizer on top of the soil under the tree in the hope that this fertilizer will gradually leach into the soil, thereby feeding the tree. This is not so good in the case of home use as the grass will probably get the major part of the fertilizer placed there. Another objection to this plan is that the fine feeding roots will be attracted to the surface of the soil in search of this food. This is not good for the tree.

Probably the best method of feeding trees is by the use of holes in the ground made with a crowbar. These holes should be about 18 inches deep and should be placed in a circle just underneath the outer spread of the tree branches. They should be placed about two feet apart. A second circle of holes should then be placed half way between the trunk of the tree and the first circle. This circle of holes will not be necessary if the tree is small, that is having a spread of less than eight or ten feet. These holes should then be filled to within three inches of the surface with the fertilizer to be used filling the remainder of the hole with soil.

Many gardeners recommend stable manure for shade trees. It makes a very fine mulch and improves the mechanical condition of the soil tremendously. But it does not feed the trees in a proper manner if it is broadcast on the surface of the ground under the trees. Liquidized barnyard or cow manure is very fine when used on freshly planted stock.

When shade trees have been given a thorough fertilization it will not be necessary to feed them again for some time, perhaps a year or more, unless unusual conditions prevail. Every year or two should be sufficient to keep the trees healthy and vigorous. A casual observation of the color of the leaves will be sufficient to judge the necessity of further feeding. Undernourishment is generally characterized by yellowish green, undersized leaves, thinness of foliage, small amount of new growth and occasionally by the dying back at the tips of the limbs.

Properly fed trees will show an improvement within a few days. The foliage will soon take on a rich, deep color and the change in the size and volume of the foliage will be quickly apparent. The development of healthy, vigorous growth tends to check both insects and diseases and there is less chance of limbs being torn off during high winds.

There are a number of commercial, complete plant foods highly recommended for the feeding of shade trees. Your nurseryman or seedsmen can help you in the selection of one of these for best results. It is not a bad plan to choose one that is fairly slow acting. Trees do not feed very fast but they do like food over a long period of time. It would be almost impossible to feed trees too much bone meal. We feel that for best results the raw bone meal would be better than the steamed bone meal. The raw will last for a good many months, in fact the poorer grades will last for more than a year. It might be well to add a bit of commercial complete plant food with the bone meal.

During hot, dry spells, such as we had during the latter part of July, it becomes necessary to give our trees a drink of water. The method by which this water is supplied is of almost importance. Watering under the wrong plan is worse than no watering at all. The common mistake made in watering is to sprinkle the top of the ground for a few minutes. This superficial sprinkling may help the grass under the tree some but will not help the tree at all. It may attract some of the fine feeding roots to the surface, which is not beneficial, but by the time these fine roots are at the surface the water will be gone and the tree thirstier than ever. For beneficial results the ground under the branch spread should be soaked with water, the hose should be allowed to run for a couple of hours in each spot. After watering has been completed some time take a small shovel and remove one spadeful of soil to ascertain exactly how deep the water has penetrated the soil.

A good method of watering trees is by puddling, this may be done by making a number of holes under the branch spread exactly as they were made in the case of fertilizing the tree and filling these holes with water. This filling should be carried on rather slowly in order that the water will have plenty of time to seep into the soil. Remember that this puddling should be carried on only during periods of prolonged droughts or the year following the transplanting of the tree.

It is a comparatively easy matter to keep trees in a healthy, vigorous condition by a little systematic feeding and watering. It is certainly much easier and less expensive than waiting until the tree is about to die and then having to resort to some very drastic expensive methods of tree surgery and care.

Spraying. Fortunately very few insects attack our trees here in Atlanta. The two most common troubles are a few caterpillars and a few borers. The borers may be controlled by the use of paradichlorobenzene which must be applied during the early fall. Most of the caterpillars and other chewing insects that attack our trees may be controlled, by the occasional use of an arsenate spray.

The common disease that attacks the trees is the rotting of the trunk. This must be cut away and filled with tree cement. We would recommend that this be done only by an expert.

The dead branches that are seen in fine trees everywhere should be removed as soon as they are noticed.

Grading and Filling. It sometimes becomes necessary to grade or fill and great care must be taken not to hurt the trees in either case. If grading exposes very many roots there are chances that the tree will be killed, on the other hand, if the fill is more than a foot there is danger of the tree becoming suffocated. In filling the following method is highly recommended. About one foot of coarse gravel should be placed on top of the ground from three feet beyond the branch spread back to the trunk of the tree itself. A well should be built around the tree trunk. The drainage should then be connected with the coarse gravel at the lowest point leading to an opening at a lower level.

THE ETIQUETTE OF BRIDGE

BY ELY CULBERTSON

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst

JOSEPH B. ELWELL, who wrote illuminatingly on the game of bridge whist, was one of the master card players of all time. His books are still treasured by those interested in the literature of the game. In one of his publications, entitled "Advanced Bridge," he laid down the following rules governing etiquette, which are as applicable in this age as in his. Part of them are embodied in the code of laws; all of them are worthy of observation by every player.

"It has been truthfully said that there is no game in which slight intimations can convey so much information as that of bridge. In justice to those who, by their manner, give information, it may be stated that most of the apparent unfairness at the bridge table is unintentional. Hesitation and mannerisms, however, cannot be too carefully avoided; such a breach of etiquette is an offense for which the adversaries have no redress except perhaps a refusal to continue the play.

"It is obviously a greater fault to take advantage of information thus given. A play in your judgment may be perfectly sound, but you leave yourself open to criticism if it is in any way contingent on information obtained from your partner's manner.

"Cultivate uniformity in your style of play; let there be no remarkable haste or hesitation in making or passing; try always to use the same formula of words, and do not call attention to the score after the cards are dealt.

"Remember that any undue hesitancy in regard to doubling will deprive a fair-minded partner of the privilege of so doing.

"Emphasize no play of your own, and show no pleasure or displeasure at any other play.

"Do not ask to have the cards placed unless it is solely for your own information.

"It is an offense either to revoke purposely or to make a secede revoke in order to conceal the fact.

"The dealer's partner should not call attention to the score nor to any cards that he or she or the other players hold, and neither should he leave his seat for the purpose of watching his partner's play."

An Unusual Slam Bid. "Rare is the occasion," writes Mr. John W. Jacobson, of Toronto, "when it is possible to arrive at a perfectly sound grand slam contract in the face of an adverse opening bid. Such an opportunity presented itself during a point game between Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Hamilton and Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Slyne, of Toronto, and the excellent deduction of the south player in placing all the adverse honor strength with East was responsible for the ultimate contract of seven diamonds, which, of course, was made without difficulty.

"The responses of both North and South players were most illuminating throughout, particularly North's first bid, showing a club stopper and two honor-tricks. South's assumption that her partner held not more than two spades was justified by the heart bid and diamond support, showing four hearts and greater length in diamonds than spades. We have never encountered a better bid hand."

Contract Wins Africa. I am informed by Mr. J. F. Ferreira that after a somewhat stubborn battle, auction bridge has now given way to contract in South Africa. "We, in Johannesburg," he states, "are proud of the fact that the development of contract in this far-flung country has been led by players of this city.

"Since last September, a contract circle has been in existence, meeting every Tuesday evening at the Carlton hotel in Johannesburg. It has now been converted into a regular club, and we expect the coming season to be an eventful one. Enthusiasm for contract is a dominating factor in card-playing circles in Johannesburg today, and local newspapers are giving much space to this intellectual pastime.

The executive committee of the Johannesburg Contract Bridge Club comprises the following well-known players: J. Cranko, chairman; Max Cohn, A. J. Levy, J. Alexander, Cyril Friedman, J. P. Long, B. Kessel and J. F. Ferreira.

"Johannesburg players are enthusiastic followers of the approach-forcing system.

"We are at present quite naturally suffering from a good deal of bad feeling, and there is considerable confusion in the minds of players, due to the fact that most any alleged expert seems able to find a publisher for his ideas.

"Despite these handicaps, Johannesburg is now able to put an excellent team-of-four in the field, and we are in a receptive mood for challenges from other clubs in South Africa."

Bridge Storm in England.

Contract bridge has swept Merry England, devastating the dance halls, the social evenings and all other indoor amusements. To be de rigor in the best British circles these days is not to know the latest dance step, but to know the proper response to a forcing takeout with a two-suited hand. I am informed by Herbert Lawrence, even golf, most universal of all games, has suffered. Enthusiasts who used to supplement the dictionary with invective when rain interfered with their playing programs, take the vagaries of the English climate with a new found calm. Why? Contract bridge. They almost welcome rain, because it offers an excellent excuse for playing a rubber of bridge.

The limit was reached during the court levee, held by their majesties a few weeks ago. Stretched along the Mall, that lovely approach to Buckingham palace, was a mile of luxurious salon cars—the seats of the mighty. They waited hours to take their turn to be presented to the king and queen. Did they mind? Not a bit of it. Why? Contract bridge. In the dimly lighted interiors of the handsome salons, ladies wearing coronets and men with breasts full of decorations whiled away the time playing contract, and I feel sure that there was dismay in many an aristocratic heart when rubbers were interfered with by the end of the waiting period.

THE FOUR QUEENS.

By E. Seif. Four sisters are we, in distress. The reason, some of you may guess. We all of us—alas—are wedded. To stiff old kings we long have dreaded. We live in terror of our lives; Two fairs, two dark, unhappy wives; And tremble lest our lords discover We each have got a knavish lover.

This Week's Problem. Each Sunday I will prepare a problem in end-play. In this week's problem, which is Number 2 of the series, clubs are trump and it is south's lead. North and South are to win all of the five remaining tricks against any possible defense. The answer will be given next Sunday.

Trick 2. South leads the heart 8; North discards a small club.

Tricks 3 to 5 are played accordingly to the discards of East and West at Trick 2. If East has discarded a diamond and West a club, South leads the diamond 10, which is covered by West with the knave and trumped by North, and South makes the club ace and diamond 7. If East has discarded a club and West a diamond, South leads the diamond 7, which is trumped by North, and wins Trick 5 with the 10. If East and West both discard clubs, South leads the club ace, North trumps at Trick 4, and wins Trick 5 with the club 10. For East and West both to discard a diamond is equally fatal.

Over the Garden Wall

BY LADYE GAYE

DIARY OF A DIRT DIGGER:

MONDAY NIGHT:

VERY nice way to start the day off right is to run out and wish the garden a "good morning." No grouch can stand out long against the dew-washed radiance of the just-awakened garden. Here is to be found peace and beauty and contentment.

And, in passing from bed to border, it is a very good time to snip off all faded blossoms and forming seed pods. That goes for both annuals and perennials, for seed maturity is every plant's chief ambition in life. Naturally, when it has attained this goal, there's no need, so far as the plant can tell, for further effort. So, every dirt digger can materially prolong her blossom time if she will regularly remove seed pods or better still, faded flowers. Another happy result will be the well-kept look of her garden day in and day out. Of course, if one wishes to save some special seed, tie a little red string around that particular blossom and, thereby, be reminded not to snip it.

TUESDAY:

Here are some Don't Forget's for August: Don't forget to stake that late planted batch of gladioli to prevent wind damage. Use one stick to each bulb. Don't forget that the rock garden will welcome gladly a good soaking during a dry spell. They are, many of them, Alpine plant—and there's a whole world of difference between the Alps and our rock garden "perennials." Don't forget to order seed—Evergreen Mixture—for the lawn. Don't forget to apply a top dressing of bone meal to the soil around the delphiniums.

WEDNESDAY:

On the subject of multiplying perennials, one well-known author says: "It is a very new gardener, indeed, who has not tasted some of the delights and rewards of seed sowing. But the dividing of one's most valued plants is a more ambitious act perhaps, and at the very first attempt calls for considerably more wisdom and courage, as—knife in hand—we contemplate the division of one beautiful clump into several. But any amateur who wishes to increase his stock in this way has only to follow directions. Experienced nurserymen may do the work more deftly, but plants, like children, are amazingly responsive to individual and personal attention. So "No king of old or pirate bold" had more power to increase his store of treasure than the veriest greenhorn among us!

Along in late August and September, is thought to be about the best time to divide perennials. First, dig carefully all around the clump, lift it, cut off the tops and wash the soil from the roots with the hose. Study each plant closely so the cutting may be done as economically as possible; and also so that the "eyes" of the crown portion of each division may be as closely connected to the storage root as can be managed. It is best to have at least two buds to each division.

The newly made divisions should be replanted immediately in good, rich soil, which has been previously prepared. No fertilizing material of any sort should be allowed to come into contact with roots or crown. Starting with a good, roomy hole, we grasp the plant firmly while the fine soil is washed in about the roots so that the crown buds are not more than one inch below the surface of the ground when we have finished, and will not sink at the first rain that happens along. And that one inch means exactly one inch—no more and no less. So planted, we can reasonably look forward to their blooming year after year, even after we have become "oecogeniums!"

Like peonies, Oriental poppies should also be moved during their sleepy time. During this month we may, if we like, shift whole clumps from one place to another, or lift and divide them at our own sweet will. I say divide, but the fact is they fall apart obligingly at exactly the right spot. And that shouldn't happen to provide enough new plants for a very acquisitive gardener, small sections of snared-off root planted the right way up—be very sure about that—will make more and more plants. The sections of root should be about three inches long. Firm these cuttings into damp earth with about one-half inch of soil above their tops. Do not water these cuttings—just forget about 'em, and by late fall nice little poppy leaves will have developed. Cover them lightly and leave them where they are until they go dormant next summer—and move while unconscious.

Knowing Your Stars

BY EVANGELINE ADAMS

The World's Most Famous Astrologer.

WAS MERCURY IN CANCER WHEN YOU WERE BORN?

I RECEIVE a great many letters from my newspaper readers and, even though it is impossible for me to answer them personally, I get a great deal of pleasure in reading them. Here is an excerpt from one letter in which the reader thanked me for a rather unique service I seem to have rendered him in one of my articles:

"I am 61 years old last February 23, and I never could tell you before why I was a 'durn fool.' Too free-headed; have lots of friends, and really true friends, too; and some, no matter what you do for them, it's never appreciated. Well, in last week's paper you told the truth. I wish to thank you for this kind of information."

I'm glad if I've been of any assistance to this particular reader but I can't agree with his description of himself as a "durn fool." The article in question to which he referred was the one outlining the influence of Venus in the sign Pisces, a position which usually makes for a very affectionate nature and one which delights in doing things for other people.

You can bet that he has lots of really true friends, for his generous disposition will attract them. And his mind is usually "energetic" too, for his horoscope shows Mercury in Aquarius, the most humane of all signs. No, my friend, yours is not the horoscope of a "durn fool" by any means. The mere fact that all people are not endowed with a sense of appreciation by no means is a fault of yours. How much happier the world would be if there were more "durn fools" like you in it. I suspect that as you look back over life you will find many of your difficulties have been brought about by your impetuosity, for the moon was in Aries when you were born, and this would give you an inclination to act rashly without careful consideration and thought.

But I'm afraid I'm straying from my subject. Today I'm going to tell my other readers how the planet Mercury influences their mental reactions if it was located in the sign Cancer at the time of their birth. First, look at the accompanying table and see whether or not you have Mercury in Cancer in your horoscope. If the date of your birth is included in the periods listed in the table, then you are a Mercury-in-Cancer person.

As I've told you before, the position of the sun at birth determines whether you are an Aries, or Taurus or Gemini person, but there are seven planets besides the sun and moon and all do not move at the same rate of speed. Consequently, all may be in different signs. Venus governs our affections, sentiments and love nature, while Mercury governs the mind.

If you have Mercury in Cancer you are very intuitive, sensitive, impressionable and you assimilate knowledge more through travel, association and observation than through books. While you may find it difficult to give a reason for many of your opinions and beliefs, you will succeed best when you follow your "hunches" or convictions, although you dislike to make a decision until after much thought.

The best time for making your plans would be in the early morning when you are alone. You have more alertness in elaborating on the ideas of others than in original, creative work. Another person may get an idea without knowing how to develop it into something practical and would, perhaps, do nothing further with it. You, however, can take this same idea from him and develop it and elaborate it until it is ready for practical application.

If called upon to speak before the public, you may depend almost wholly upon the inspiration of the moment. Your intuition will tell you what to say.

You should avoid overtaxing your brain, otherwise in old age you may suffer from impaired memory or live too much in the past. This tendency to live in the past is characteristic of Cancer people and you should remember that the present and future is more important than the past. Cancer is likewise an exceedingly cautious sign, and much of your mental reaction will hinge upon precedent. That is to say, you will compare present-day actions and modes by what has been done in the past.

You seem to take on the thoughts and feelings of others without realizing it, and while apparently easily influenced, you are in reality most tenacious and almost too conservative. You will frequently give the impression of having been swayed by some argument, yet actually your mind will not have been changed in the slightest degree. This will be especially true if you also have sun in Cancer, which would be the case if you were born between June 22 and July 23. You may be inclined to let your emotions sway your judgment and there may be times when this will lead you into difficulties.

Your sympathies are easily excited and your understanding is excellent. On the other hand, if you dislike a person, you will dislike him intensely and you will find it difficult to endure his company. And yet you are in reality very tolerant of other people's shortcomings.

In your business dealings, try to develop your judgment so that it functions upon logical argument and reasons why, rather than upon sentiment and emotion. And if you are uncertain, follow your intuition or your "hunches." While they may not be right all of the time, you'll find that they will be most of the time.

A great many very famous writers have been born when Mercury was in the sign Cancer. Included in the list are: Alexander Dumas, Lord Tennyson, George Bernard Shaw, Henry Ward Beecher, Booth Tarkington and Elbert Hubbard. In addition, we may list the great actor William Gillette, the artist Harrison Fisher, George M. Cohan, John D. Rockefeller Sr., and Calvin Coolidge.

WHEN MERCURY WAS IN CANCER.

The following table will tell you whether or not Mercury was in the watery sign Cancer at the time of your birth. Run your eye down the left-hand column until you come to the year of your birth. To the right of the year, are the dates covering the period during which Mercury was in Cancer that year. If the date of your birth is not included, then Mercury was not in Cancer, but was one of the other signs of the zodiac. Watch for future articles and the period of your birth will be covered.

"I've Got One! But, By Golly, I Wouldn't Advise Anyone Else To Tie Up With a Perfect Husband—Here's My Tale of Woe"

By a "Perfect Husband's Wife."

Suppose You Married a Man "Too Good to Be True" As This Girl Did, Then Found He Expected You to Size Up Same Way

A Real Story from Life

Right From the Heart Is This Outburst of a Young Woman Who Wishes Her Better Half Would Kick Over Traces Just Once

I've got him. You can have him! The "Perfect Husband"—and this is a heartfelt warning for every girl—is a curious animal who should be caged in a zoo. Not that anyone would care particularly to stop and watch him, but because, caged in a zoo, every girl considering marriage would have an opportunity to study the sort of man whom so many of our elders seem to think "ideal."

Why a woman of 50, a mother who has had years of experience, should look upon a man who doesn't smoke, drink, swear, flirt, or otherwise kick over the traces that life uses to restrain married men, I'm blessed if I know.

As a theory, I admit it sounds good. But mothers, heaven knows, shouldn't need to theorize. By 50 a woman ought to have found out some of the things that make life worth living—even if she has missed out on most of them herself, through youthful folly or poor judgment.

I remember that when George first came to pay a call, mother said to me:

Just a Fool.

"That's the kind of man you should try to get, Edna. If he's interested in you, and you let him slip away to some other girl, you're just a fool, that's all."

I said: "I don't think he's so much. I've got an idea he's a flat tire."

"There you go! You and your notions! I tell you, you girls with your crazy ideas about life being one long song and dance make me sick. To see you gad about a body'd think there was no more to marriage than a petting party outside a dance hall. Wait'll the bills begin to roll in, my dear, and the babies start coming along! Then's the time when these smart sheiks of yours won't be much good. All they'll do is eat their heads off and see their jobs every two weeks. Take my advice, and grab a steady man while the grabbing is good. But you won't take my advice!"

Well, all I can say is that I wish I hadn't taken it. But I did take it. Nice little girl, got married according to the best advice obtainable. And now lookit!

I sent three of the nicest boys in the world into the arms of three very willing girls when I passed up Tommy, Dan and Kelvin, in order to promise to obey George. As far as I can see, Norah, Patsy and Grace—the girls who got those three darling boys—have no kicks against life.

Maybe I'm just one of the girls who can never be satisfied with anything. As my father—owls to malcontents: "Ah—you'd kick if you played football!" Well, I'll present my evidence, such as it is.

George was pretty keen for me. He was one of those boys . . . Oh, you know—a very conscious sense of duty. He would never do the wrong thing as long as there was any danger of his being called wrong.

No Men Are Saints.

Take Dan, for example. Dan kissed me the first chance he got, and when I slapped his face good and proper he only laughed. I don't know whether Dan had any thoughts of marriage at that moment or not; but I do know that that slap didn't affect his intentions in the least. Dan believed in letting events take their course—and I understood him, and liked him. He might or might not ask me to marry him; but he wasn't one of those men who would pass up a girl because she was easy to kiss, and marry her because she was hard to kiss.

Oh, Dan was a good egg—on the level—decent and straightforward. But I think I sized up George pretty well. The one way to get him deeply interested in me, I decided, was to be pleasant—but a bit difficult. I never slapped him. Slapping might have been fatal with George. It would have hurt his feelings.

Instead, when he put his arm around me, I let it stay for a second or two, then drew away. I would smile at him half-ashfully, half excitedly. Any girl'll know what I mean by that.

Because, of course, no men are saints. Only some of them like to believe that you believe they're extra-special people. Little tin gods on wheels.

George, you see, was—and still is—the sort of person who can't recognize anything without a label. A good girl acts in certain ways. If she doesn't do exactly as "think she ought to, then she's not very good."

I had to be very good—without being too vehement about it. And the system worked.

Am I too catty about my husband? Well—I wish I didn't feel as I do!

Our Troubles Began.

Almost from the day we were married our troubles began.

It was a June wedding, late in June—perhaps one of you reading this is still on her honeymoon—and we went to a Cape Cod beach for our honeymoon. I bought me a snappy sun-back bathing suit—nothing extreme, you understand, but very good to look at.

George didn't see it at all until I took off my roughe beach pajamas. Then he said:

"I don't know, Edna—"

"What's the matter?" I asked, surprised.

"Well . . . That bathing suit of

In my room I tried to shut the door. George got there before I could lock it. He pushed at the half-ajar door in an attempt to get in. "And," he moaned, "I had perfect trust in you."

yours . . . Seems to me it's sort of—uh—stagey . . .

"Why George! It's in perfect style—"

"Oh, I don't deny that. But just the same . . . Well, I'm not so keen about some styles, and I don't like the idea of people—uh—seeing so much of my wife . . ."

I wish to proclaim to all brand-new brides that right then and there I put my foot down. Gently—but down. I told George that I had paid several dollars for that suit, partly to delight his eye, partly to make him proud of his wife on a beach where many beautiful women would be bathing—and partly because I happened to like the darned thing. And he could put that in his pipe and smoke it!

But that last fell pretty flat. George looked pained. How could he put it in his pipe and smoke it, when he never smoked?

Well, the honeymoon passed, with no further tremendous incident, though a few times I did squirm under glares from George's eyes. If of Annam, as once was done in Peihappened to meet, he went green and wrathful.

The Strangest Girl.

Mind you, I don't object to jealousy of other men's attentions to you isn't worth having round the house. It's just so much nice appreciation of you. But there are limits.

Mother came around to see us soon after we'd got settled down.

"Well, I-I-I?" I asked.

And then the usual questions? Did we enjoy ourselves? Wasn't I the happiest girl alive? What in the world was there more thrilling and divine than a honeymoon?

"I feel," I said flatly, "as if I'd just come home from a visit to the aquarium."

Mother gaped. "You are the strangest girl I hope that you haven't let George see that?"

"Oh, there's no need to worry. He can't see anything unless he's looking for it, and it would never occur to him to think that a bride could be unhappy with him! But cheer up, mother—we'll make the best of it. I suppose all marriages are sort of disappointing."

Mother went away rather glum. I'll say for her that she has always been kind and loving. All her criticisms of me were justly earned, in her own opinion—and that's the only opinion you can have, isn't it, that counts? And now-a-days, when George and I frequently squabble, I can always rely on mother for sympathy. She knows I'm just dog-some unhappy.

Well, to get back to unpleasant events . . .

Took Bridge Seriously.

George wasn't one to go out much. He didn't care much for dancing. Used to say that he couldn't waste the time, or something like that, but the real reason was that he was clumsy and a punk dancer, and never felt comfortable on the dance floor.

So we went to about two dances the first year. And both those were impromptu affairs—earthquake bridges that just naturally went from Mabel's, by fits and starts, delirious toward the end and broke up into dancing to the radio.

George didn't like earthquake bridge. He took his bridge very seriously—played a mediocre game that once in a while brought him first prize, and enjoyed being able to think himself very clever.

I said afterwards—and it was very thoughtless of me to say it: "Warry Grant's a marvelous dancer—"

George snorted. "Why shouldn't he? All his brains are in his feet. I can't see what you can see in that guy. I wouldn't give him houseroom."

"Why George, I—"

"I know. I'm not saying he means a thing in your life. But it galls me to see the way a bird like that can make you girls flutter around. There ought to be a law!"

A few nights later I was offered a cigaret. Imagine it—a cigaret! And the other girls were smoking. I don't smoke . . . Oh, I've smoked a few times, but it doesn't appeal to me. But this time I took the cigaret. Just not to make a silly point of non-smoking.

Just Too Bad.

George frowned. "Smoking, dear?" he said, with cor-ical menace in his voice.

"Just for a change," I laughed. "I guess it won't ruin me."

"I'd rather you didn't," said George, unaware of the amused looks of the others.

I smiled at him sweetly. "Well, now, that's too bad, honey . . . Himmums must have worked too hard today . . . I'd rather I did!"

That shut George up. (I do hope that I'm not giving the impression of being a saucy, impolite and disagreeable wife. Because I have tried awfully to get along with George!) That is, it shut him up till we were on the way home.

"Made a fine fool out of me tonight," he growled.

"Oh, George, do be reasonable. Think of how it looked, you telling me what I could and what I couldn't do—right in front of everybody!"

I snapped, furiously: "You deserve a better wife than I, my dear. I think it will be better if I leave tomorrow. I'll go home to mother!"

At that he stopped pushing the door and went away.

But my going didn't suit George at all. I don't know just why—I suspect that he felt that a separation would be a reflection of his own reflection—but in the morning he solemnly urged me to stay. He had thought deeply about the affair of the night. He could see that it was merely carelessness on my part—that I had not intended to do wrong. He would let bygones be bygones.

And I . . . I let bygones be bygones, too! I determined that I would . . . to ignore all George's irksome characteristics and seek out his better qualities. I would try to appreciate George. I hate the idea of divorce. Even separation promises nothing but dismal emptiness.

But it's hard, awfully hard, to be glad that I'm married to George.

What else was I to do but take it as a big joke! But I promise you this: now, I won't smoke any more. I didn't know it would make you explode like that."

If you have never had much to do with the perfect husband, you don't know that what he expects and fights to get is a perfect wife—as he sees perfection. She must not ask for any help around the house. A perfect wife can handle all her routine, cleaning and washing and all the rest, and yet manage to look like something you'll meet at a fashionable hotel. Also, she doesn't ask for money all the time—even if she needs it most of the time. For practically nothing she can turn out a meal as good as the best of the best hotel—and have something left for hash the next night.

I just couldn't do it. I think I kept house as well as most girls could have; but that didn't satisfy George.

It was a laugh to listen to him holding forth on the subject of perfect trust and a wife's honor. He had perfect trust in me, he said; but I knew perfectly well that what he really meant was that he considered himself so desirable a husband that no girl would think for a minute of any other man.

Perfect Trust!

Perfect husband . . . Perfect trust . . . Blah!

You should have been at our front door the night I drove home in Frank's car. I had gone out to visit a friend one evening, alone, and when it came time to go home, Frank showed up. Now, the fact is that Frank and this friend I was visiting were practically engaged.

That will convince you—maybe—that when I say we not only got into a traffic jam, but also had a blow-out, I am possibly telling the truth.

We arrived at my home at one in the morning.

George was up—and waiting. He didn't have a club or gun in his hand, but it might have been more gentlemanly if he had.

"Where have you been?" he snarled at me.

"Nowhere," I said. "Just coming from Mabel's, by fits and starts."

"You left Mabel's three hours ago!" he accused.

"Of course I did! Isn't it pathetic?" I said. "We've been having a terrible time. Poor Frank's about all in."

That turned his attention on Frank. He said:

"See here, if it's all the same to you, stay away from my wife!"

Frank was pretty mad. But he was a good sport. He glanced at me—then shrugged. Far be it from him to start a pitched battle and thereby add to my miseries.

"O. K. with me. Let me know if you ever decide to drown yourself. I'd be tickled pink to send flowers."

Frank drove off. I rushed into the house and up to my room. George following after me. In my room I shut the door, or rather, tried to. George got there before I could.

George got there before I could lock it. He pushed at the half-ajar door in an attempt to get in. I struggled to keep him out.

"And," he moaned, "I had perfect trust in you!"

I snapped, furiously: "You deserve a better wife than I, my dear. I think it will be better if I leave tomorrow. I'll go home to mother!"

He had thought deeply about the affair of the night. He could see that it was merely carelessness on my part—that I had not intended to do wrong. He would let bygones be bygones.

And I . . . I let bygones be bygones, too! I determined that I would . . . to ignore all George's irksome characteristics and seek out his better qualities. I would try to appreciate George. I hate the idea of divorce. Even separation promises nothing but dismal emptiness.

But it's hard, awfully hard, to be glad that I'm married to George.

Annam, "Carrying Pole" of Indo-China

The typhoon, dread scourge of the South China Sea, that swept across the southern tip of the province of Annam, in French Indo-China, recently, took a heavy toll of life and practically obliterated several small towns over a 30-mile coastal area. Two cities, Phan Thiet, and Bangay, on the Old Mandarin Road, were also hard hit.

"The long, narrow province of Annam is a 'carrying pole' uniting two 'bags of rice,' Tonkin and Cochinchina," says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic Society.

"But mountainous Annam also raises much rice, on narrow fields squeezed between rugged highlands and the sea, and, due to her unique position on the curving coast, the central and northern districts get sufficient rains on both monsoons to raise two crops of rice a year.

Once Part of China.

"For more than a thousand years Annam, which is nearly one-fifth as large as France, was part of China, but in 1423 it broke away from the Ming rule. Later it sent tributary gifts to the Manchu throne. Because of this long overlordship of China, the rulers of Annam were governed by the Book of Rites, and have surrounded themselves with military and civil mandarins in imitation of China's court. On an expanse outside of Hue, the capital of Annam, as once was done in Pei-

and earth are performed by the emperor, assisted by mandarins.

"Annam is less under French control, officially, than any of the other states in the territorial group known as French Indo-China. Until recently the imperial palace at Hue was forbidden ground. It is still not easy of access. France is represented by a resident-superior, but all his mandates are carried out, by courtesy, in the name of the emperor, who is to his own people, like the former emperor of China, 'The Son of Heaven.'"

The Old Mandarin Road.

"Through Annam's coastal plain runs one of the world's most picturesque highways, prosaically called Route Coloniale No. 1 by the French. This vital traffic link threads its way through the entire length of Indo-China's thick jungles, wide-spread rice plains, and up and down forested hills for some 1,600 miles, from the Siamese frontier to the China gateway.

"Although improved recently under the French colonial program, much of this route follows the old Mandarin road, down which once marched the power and culture of China's emperors, to the imperial Annamese court at Hue.

"Today the road is excellent, but congested with beasts and people. The Annamese are a restless lot, and, with their numerous dogs, water buffaloes, and an occasional elephant, are ever on the move.

What Has Happened To Justice

Ralph Reno Heard Own Gallows Built, Proved Innocence; Now a Wait

BY PETER LEVINS.

"I'm sorry, Ralph, but I'm afraid we'll have to move you." The guard's voice was gentle, but the dark-eyed prisoner flinched as from an actual blow. Nothing could soften the grimness of those words. Ralph Reno was going to the death house. Within 72 hours he was to have for the murder of Edward and Mary Palombizio.

The man had twice heard himself pronounced guilty, and had listened to the fatal words from the bench: "... to be hanged by the neck until dead! dead! dead!"

This man, who had featured in two of Chicago's most spectacular murder trials, had come to the end of the road. The voice that had vainly protested his innocence was to be hushed forever. Ralph Reno rose and started down the corridors of Cook county jail, en route to the gallows that dismal morning of April 23, 1932.

Two guards accompanied him. They were strangely kind and tender. After all, there was considerable doubt in the minds of many people concerning the guilt of the condemned man. But the law had spoken. The machinery of justice had enmeshed him. Ralph Reno was being drawn to his death.

The cell in which the condemned men who are about to die on the gallows are confined is a fair-size room, on the second floor of the county jail, just across the corridor from the warden's office.

The soft-voiced Italian entered the dismal room and dropped hopelessly on one of the beds.

Ralph Reno sat and listened as the workmen erected the gallows on which he was to die the next morning.

Presently the pounding ended. The death machine was ready. Silence brooded over the cell again. The long hours slipped by—yet all too rapidly for the waiting victim.

Nightfall. The last sunset Ralph Reno was to behold. And finally came a visitor. The assistant superintendent.

"What do you want for your last meal, Ralph?" His voice, too, was kind.

The prisoner glanced up gratefully. He appreciated the kindness. "Can I have some spaghetti?"

The superintendent nodded and withdrew. The meal was served. . . and eaten. And then came a soft-voiced priest.

"You had better prepare to meet your Master, Ralph."

But the condemned man sprang up and paced his cell like a caged animal. His voice cracked shrilly as he answered:

"There's nothing on my conscience. I'm innocent. I don't want any last rites."

Ten hours to live. . . . Nine hours. . . . Eight. . . . Seven. . . .

Then there came a hurried step outside in the corridor. An excited voice called eagerly:

"Bring Ralph Reno here."

The convicted man's heart leaped. He sprang to his feet and hurried to the cell door. The assistant superintendent was smiling at him, beyond the bars.

"Well, Ralph," he called. "You've got a stay."

Saved. . . almost at the eleven hour.

Ralph Reno was snatched from the shadow of the gallows again. Today he is a broken, beaten man. Deep furrows lie on his brow beneath the black hair. He has proved his innocence. Today he stands exonerated completely in the eyes of the law and the world. But the price he has paid has been a bitter one.

IN JAIL THREE YEARS, TRIED FOUR TIMES.

For three years he lay in jail. Four times he was tried—three for murder and once for attempted murder. Twice he heard himself convicted and once sentenced to die. Nine months he lay in solitary confinement following a fracas that resulted when he resented an insult that was hurled beneath the very gallows.

When he emerged he was a shattered wreck of a man. His health was broken. His job was gone. His wife and child had disappeared and long years of searching had failed to find them, even to this day. Ralph Reno suffered the tortures of the damned. . . .

And the Palombizio murder case is still unsolved.

The story of Reno is the story of the Palombizios. Their death was the beginning of his martyrdom. . . .

A martyrdom which was to win him the friendship and sympathy of men as widely apart as fearless Judge John P. McGorty and Al Capone, the gangster king.

McGorty exerted himself to the utmost to prevent a miscarriage of justice. Capone, the gangster, hiding out in the Chicago prison hospital, heard the story and had sufficient influence to have the unfortunate Reno brought down for an interview. And there the gang chieftain also offered him assistance and sent him the food and drink which took the monotony of the weary days in prison, while life itself trembled in the balance.

Edward Palombizio was an unnoticed unit among Chicago's teeming millions. He was a poor Italian laborer, who lived with his wife and baby down on the southwest side. Their friends were mostly people of their own nationality.

And among them were Ralph and Anna Reno. They were a happy and prosperous couple before fate wrecked their lives.

Ralph Reno had come to America as an immigrant boy of 15. He had been industrious and ambitious and he had made good.

Little by little he had mastered the language and the customs of his adopted country and finally, after a year, at 1004 South Prairie avenue, Chicago. He was assistant to the chief engineer of the Automatic Telephone Company. His salary was $75 a week.

The Renos and the Palombizios were good friends. They were frequent visitors at each others' homes.

A few weeks before the murder Ralph Reno had acted as godfather at the christening of the Palombizio baby. And that christening was to feature largely in the ensuing tragedy.

Ralph Palombizio, brother of the slain man, and his wife had lived with the Renos for several weeks, after leaving the home of Edward following a dispute between the brothers. Another acquaintance was Mrs. Mary Pacifico, a friend of the Palombizios, who lived on the same floor with them at 1345 West Taylor street.

Edward and Mary Palombizio were murdered on the early morning of March 23, 1932. The first news came in the form of a mysterious phone call to the police of the Maxwell Street station, informing them that a double murder had been committed at the Taylor street address. The call was received at 6:00 a. m.

Officers rushed to the Taylor street house and found a horrible sight. Edward Palombizio lay in a pool of blood in his own bed. He had been shot directly between the eyes.

His wife was lying on the kitchen floor. She was only partially dressed. She, too, had been shot through the head and the slayer had stabbed her deep in the breast with a writing pen. The two children, aged 4 and 2, crouched, frightened, in a corner. They were too small to talk.

The detectives were also informed that Mrs. Pacifico had been wounded by the murderer and neighbors already rushed her to the Cook County hospital. Detective Sergeant Barry and another officer hurried to the hospital and questioned the wounded woman.

She was dazed and excited. The murder had occurred about 5:30 that morning, while it was still dark in the upper hallway along which both families had lived. There was no skylight.

Mrs. Pacifico told the officers that some one had knocked on her door right after the shooting down the hall and that she had refused to open it.

Then, she said, a man had pushed the door open, and, standing in the dark hallway, had fired a single shot at her.

Barry later testified that she described the man as 6 feet tall and said he was wearing a mask across his face.

The police persisted with their questioning and she finally declared that Ralph Reno was the man who had shot her. Reno, however, is only 5 feet 7 inches tall.

The first he knew of the murder, he said, was that evening, when he and his wife were sitting quietly in their sitting room, after having finished their evening meal. Anna Reno was not feeling well and they had decided to spend the evening at home.

A friend called up to tell him the startling news. As soon as he hung up, Reno called police headquarters. "This is Ralph Reno," he told the officers. "I've just read in the paper that you are looking for me. I'm at my home at 1004 South Prairie avenue and I'll be here whenever you want me."

Two detectives soon responded and, at Reno's suggestion, they used his phone to call the Maxwell Street station. Four more plainclothesmen came in response to the sergeant in charge produced a warrant for Reno's arrest.

"I don't care about seeing it," said the accused man. "I phoned the police where to find me myself."

They searched the apartment carefully—and vainly—for a gun. Then the four officers escorted their prisoner to the police station. Anna Reno accompanied her husband. He did not realize, as he walked out the door, that he was never to re-enter it. Three years later, when he came anxiously back, another family was living there. And his wife had vanished completely.

Anna and her husband were questioned for hours at the Maxwell Street station. They declared both had been asleep at home at the time of the murder. Ralph explained that he had gone to work at 7:30 and had remained on the job all day long.

PRESIDING JUDGE SAVED RENO'S LIFE.

Finally Anna was told that she could go home, but her husband was placed in a cell. Many a long month was to pass before he emerged again a free man.

After a week he was transferred to the Cook county jail, and the next week the grand jury indicted him on three counts: for the murder of Edward Palombizio, the murder of his wife, Mary, and an attempt to murder Mrs. Pacifico.

Three months later Reno was brought to trial charged with the killing of both his friends. Since he was short of funds, his attorney was appointed by the court. The presiding judge was John P. McGorty, the man whose persistence was to save Reno from the gallows.

"He is the finest man I ever knew," declared Reno. "If it hadn't been for his interest in my case and his determination to see that I received justice, I wouldn't be here today."

The trial swept forward. Anna Reno wanted to testify for her husband, but was informed it would be illegal for her to do so. She had visited her husband in jail every day, but she did not attend the trial. Her baby was born shortly after it was over.

His friends rallied to his support. A long parade of them took the stand as character witnesses. They included Outinger and his wife, Joseph Smith, a friend of many years' standing; Mr. and Mrs. Benoit Lavattino, with whom Reno had lived before his marriage; and Leo Checchi, owner of the hotel where the Renos had lived before they established a home of their own. They testified to his honesty and industry, to his good reputation and even temper.

And he produced four alibi witnesses.

Mrs. Pacifico was the most damaging of the witnesses against him. From the stand she pointed him out as the man who had shot her from that unlighted hallway. She said he had been wearing a black mask.

Sergeant Barry testified that at the hospital she had described the slayer as 6 feet tall and had at first said she couldn't recognize him. Ralph Palombizio declared he had heard Reno once threaten his brother.

The state endeavored to fix a motive by declaring that Reno had given his godchild a lavalier at the time of the christening and that the parents had returned it as a gift. The prosecution implied that this insult had driven the accused man to a frenzy.

The trial lasted three days. At the close of the third day, the jury filed out to deliberate.

Next morning he faced the twelve men in court. They had deliberated for twelve hours. And the verdict was guilty.

Reno is eloquent as he describes the next scene.

Judge McGorty rebuked them in open court. "You are a disgrace to justice and a disgrace to the human race," he said. Then he turned to the prisoner. "Ralph Reno, stand up."

The stunned victim rose.

"Look at the defendant," said the judge. "Does that man look 6 feet tall to you?"

Then he turned to the prisoner and reassured him.

A week later Judge McGorty granted Ralph Reno a new trial. The second trial opened on December 19, 1935.

Judge McGorty was not on the bench this time. Instead it was Judge Harry B. Miller who presided. Once more the same prosecutors, Clarence Nelson and Harold Levy, assistant district attorneys, handled the case.

The witnesses were virtually the same. But now Mrs. Pacifico described the murderer as wearing a white, instead of a black mask.

Once more she pointed Reno out in the courtroom. She again declared the slayer was 6 feet tall.

The case dragged on for seven days. Again it went to the jury. This time the twelve men deliberated only an hour. Again the verdict was guilty.

The stunned Reno heard Judge Miller set a hearing on a motion for a new trial for a week later.

And once more he was returned to his cell.

Back in court again, Reno heard McCabe desperately for a new trial. He talked for an hour and a half. Then Judge Miller refused to grant it.

"Being the prisoner to the bar," he ordered.

Reno was led forward.

"Do you know any reason why sentence should not be passed on you? Have you anything to say?"

The prisoner made an eloquent plea for his life. He pointed out the discrepancies in the case against him. But it was in vain. Finally the judge broke in.

"It is the duty of this court to pass sentence," he said. There was a short pause. Then:

"Ralph Reno, I sentence you to be hanged by the neck until dead. . . . dead. . . ."

The prisoner stood speechless.

"Take him away," ordered the judge.

IN MURDERER'S ROW FOR FOUR MONTHS.

And he was taken away.

Ralph Reno lay in a cell in murderers' row for the next four months. He was to die on April 23. Carrying an appeal to a higher court was expensive and Reno had no funds. His friends had contributed all they could spare.

But Judge McGorty had not forgotten him. Through the jurist Reno obtained the service of Everett Jennings, a well known criminal lawyer, and the latter took an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Reno's friends rallied and made up funds to finance it.

Judge Miller had granted one delay but he refused a second. The expiration of the stay was drawing near and time was precious. It seemed that Jennings' appeal would be too late.

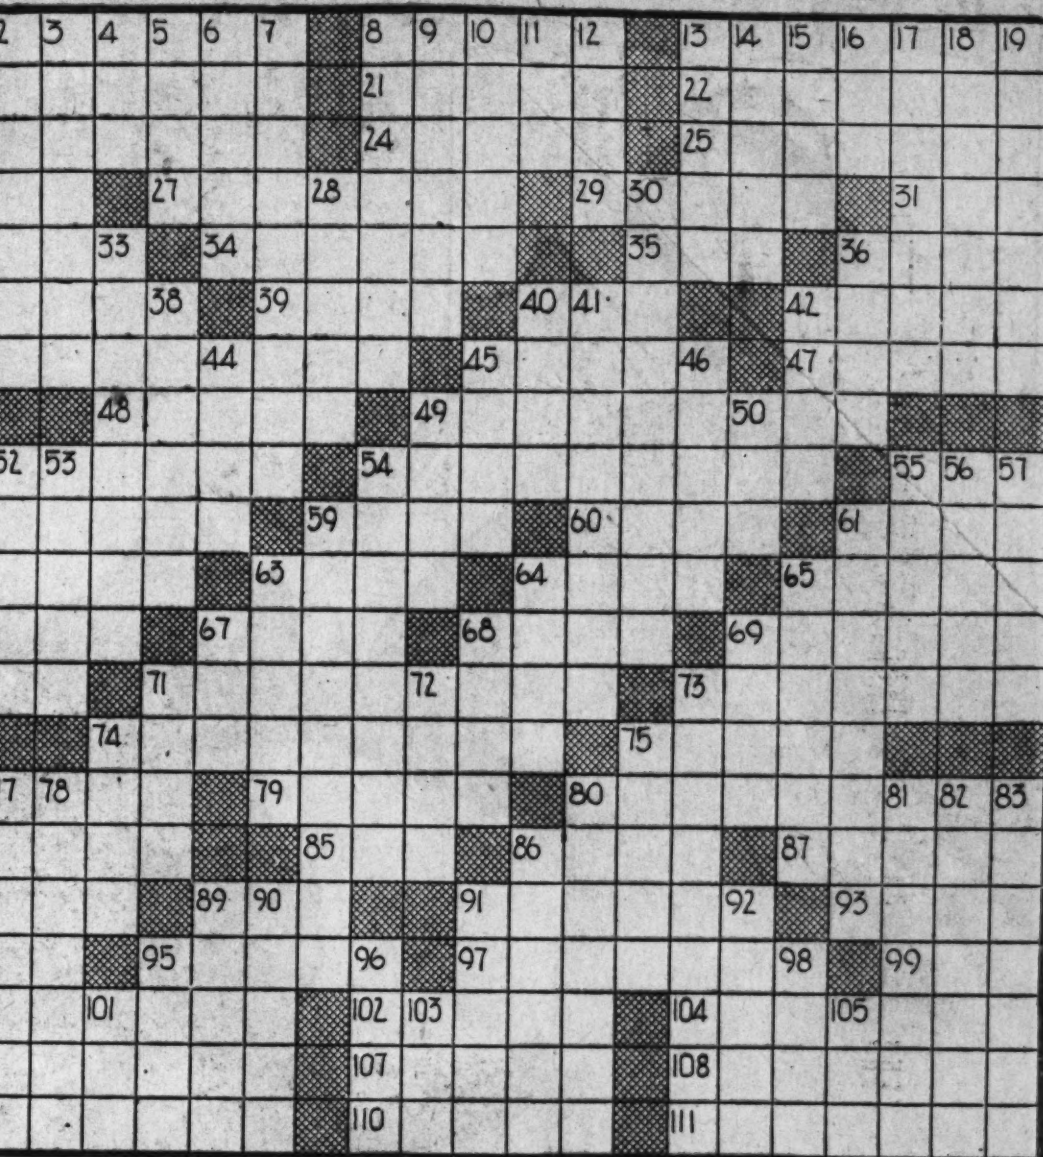

One year and one month to the day, after the murder of the Palombizios, on April 23, 1936, Ralph Reno was removed to the death house. He shook hands with his cellmate, Jack Winn, who was also awaiting execution, and accompanied the guards. The two men had become close friends, drawn together by the imminence of the fate that awaited both.

But Jennings had acted promptly and a wild dash to the capital at Springfield, made that day, proved successful. The supreme court was not in session, but the clerk of the court had the power to grant a stay until the court could review the evidence. Jennings secured the order postponing Reno's death and rushed it to Chicago. And it arrived just seven hours before the execution.

The assistant superintendent read the order to Reno and smiled warmly.

"I'll take you back to your cell," he said.

And Reno went back to be greeted

By Winn as a man returned from the dead. But the court which saved Ralph refused to act for Winn, and Reno's cellmate went to his death before the former achieved his freedom.

Back in the bullpen on the fifth floor the news of the reprieve spread like wildfire and the prisoners made a riotous demonstration in honor of the man who had been snatched from death. But one man jeered his disapproval.

"Why didn't they hang the Dago?" called this prisoner. "There's lots more where he came from."

The brutal words wrung Reno's tortured soul. He had spent nerve-wrecked hours in the death cell, and now he brooded over the callous witicism.

Next morning, in the bullpen, he sought out the traducer and flew at him like a wildcat. The prisoners were quickly separated. . . . and Reno was sent to solitary confinement, waiting for his new trial and sustaining punishment for his attack on a fellow prisoner.

He languished there, he says, for nine months. During that period Winn was executed. During that period Reno's wife and baby disappeared.

Anna had brought the baby for one last heart-wrenching interview the day before her husband was to hang.

Mrs. Ottinger had accompanied them. The farewells had been heart-breaking.

Next day Ralph was snatched from the gallows—but he never saw Anna or the baby again. Their disappearance was and still is shrouded in mystery.

Ralph spent the second of the three Christmases that he endured in Cook county jail in the solitary cell. His health had broken. Gastric ulcer was gnawing at his stomach.

And once more it was Judge McGorty who came to his rescue. Reno smuggled out a letter to the friendly jurist, through a Sister of Mercy who passed his cell and the judge came to the jail on a visit of inspection. He insisted on visiting Reno and found him in solitary. A peremptory order, and the tortured prisoner was transferred to a comfortable cell on the fifth floor.

Despite this, the months dragged on as he waited for his new trial, which had been ordered by the supreme court. Yet finally came a ray of hope. Frank McDonnell, one of the foremost criminal lawyers in Chicago, came to the jail and volunteered to represent him.

"Reno, I've been reading about your case in the papers," he said. "You've got them licked. I can put you on the street."

The harried Reno referred the lawyer to Judge McGorty and the jurist assured him it was all right. McDonnell took the case and Reno's friends began the battle to amass funds for the new trial. They raised $2,000.

More months dragged by as court skirmishing took place. There was one continuance after another. Reno was released from solitary early in 1937 and it was late in December before his case finally came up again.

McDonnell pleaded the case before Judge Elmer and his handling of the defense was masterly. The witnesses were the same and the testimony did not vary from that of the preceding two trials. The courtroom was packed when McDonnell began his plea to the jury. It was a masterpiece of courtroom oratory. He closed by turning to his client.

"Ralph Reno," he said, "where were you last Christmas?"

"In solitary confinement in Cook county jail," came the response.

"Where were you Christmas before last?"

"FREE—BUT WIFE, BABY, HOME, GONE."

"In Cook county jail."

The lawyer turned to the jury: "Gentlemen, you can't permit this man to spend another Christmas behind the bars for a crime of which he is innocent."

He won the jury. They deliberated half an hour. The verdict was not guilty.

But Reno spent his Christmas in jail just the same.

The State announced, after the verdict, that Reno had been tried on only one indictment. Two more were still pending. The prisoner must stand trial on both.

It was a terrible blow. Reno went back to his cell.

But he gained his freedom before New Year's Day.

The second murder indictment was quashed, and he was released on $2,500 bail on the attempted murder charge. His loyal friends produced the bond.

Finally he came to trial on the last indictment. And once more he was arraigned before Judge McGorty. But the trial was brief. It took place in February of 1938 and lasted only an hour and a half. The jury took just twenty minutes to acquit him of the attempt to kill Mrs. Pacifico.

He walked out of the courtroom a free man.

But he was a broken man. His health was wrecked.

Judge McGorty procured him admission to Cook county hospital, as a charity patient, and there an operation was performed which relieved the gastric ulcer.

A month later Ralph Reno stepped out onto the street, to find his life a wreck. His wife and baby were gone. His home was gone. His job was gone.

But he began a desperate effort to beat his way back.

He finally secured work and saved carfare to New York.

Then he left Chicago, the city of his suffering, and came East, where he had relatives and friends. He found work in New York—and then came the depression and unemployment.

Today Ralph Reno pounds the pavements of the biggest city, still seeking a job and hoping desperately to find a trace of his little family.

THE CORDUROY ENSEMBLE

A perfect costume for wear at the mountain resort. The model pictured above consists of a tailored suit made of narrow wale corduroy in a rich shade of green. The jacket is collarless, belted in the self-material, and boasts a three-button closing. Note the sporty slash pockets. Accompanying the suit is a brown corduroy topcoat. The yellow knit turtle-neck sweater introduces a smart color contrast.

FOR CLIMBER OR TRAVELER

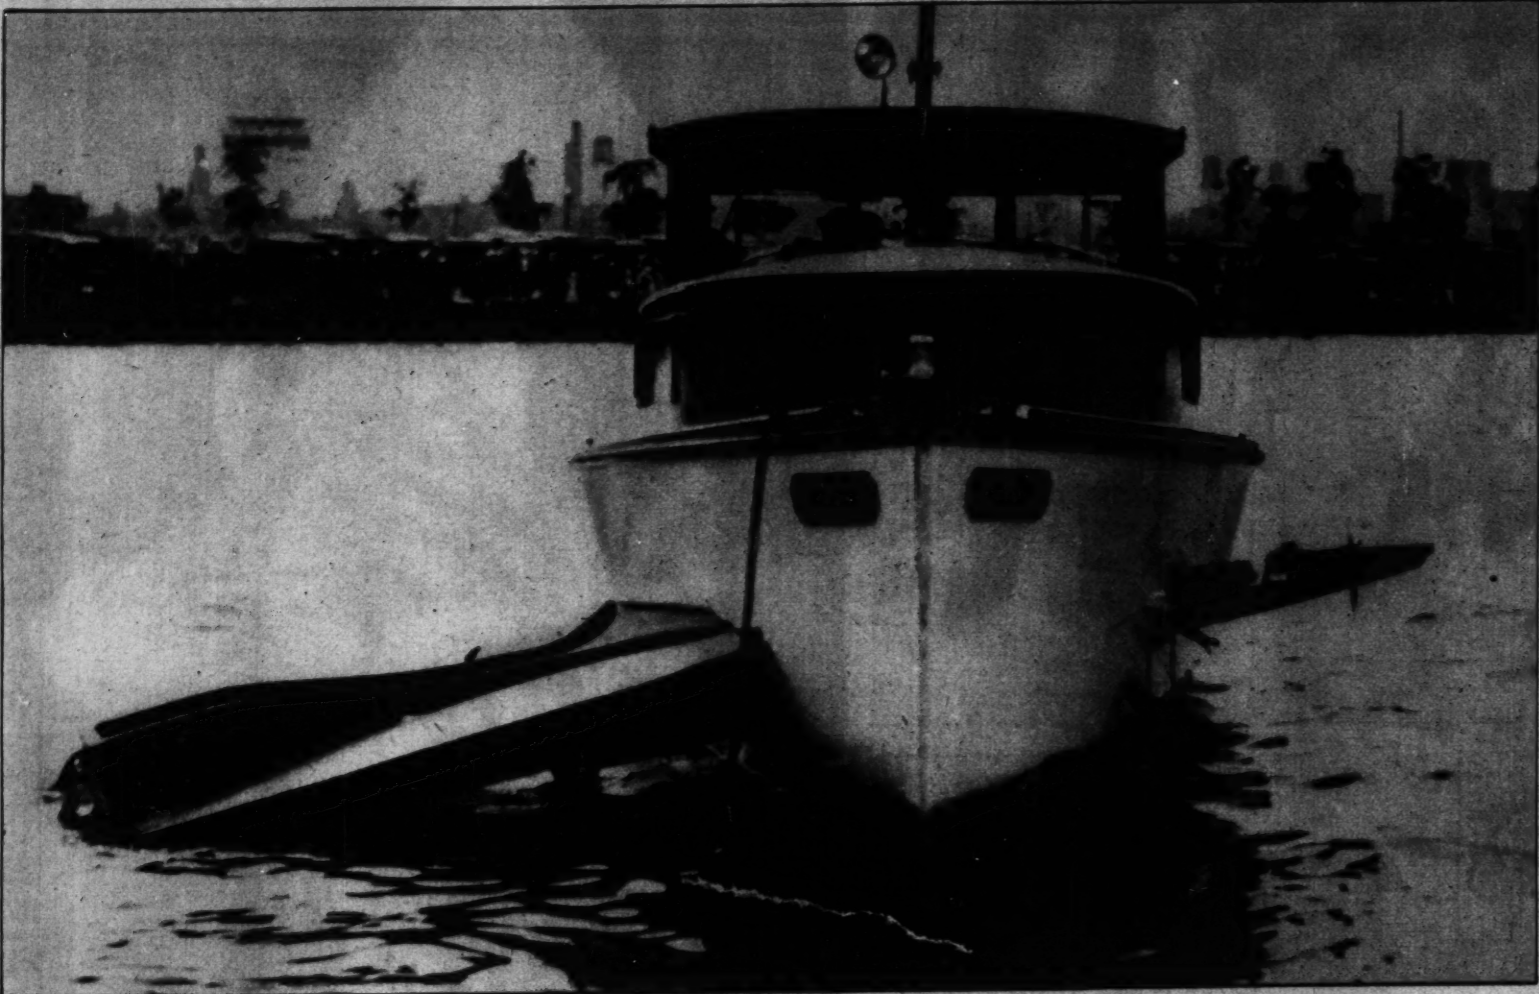

We suggest the stunning tweed ensemble pictured at the right. A coat of feather brown tweed cut on swagger lines is worn over a chic suit that reveals a brown and tan checked skirt and a solid brown jacket. The jaunty hat is of felt, and the gaily-striped scarf adds a bright note. In the next sketch tweed is used again with equal effect in a stunning sports coat. Note the dolman sleeves, the twisted belt and scarf collar. A coat of this type should be included in every vacation wardrobe if one plans to spend any time where the nights are cool.

VERY SMART AND CHARMINGLY YOUTHFUL

Is the double-breasted suit pictured above. Fashioned of a rough wool in warm yellow, its perfectly-tailored jacket is dressed-up with four patch pockets. The skirt is perfectly plain, and the orange sweater with high neckline is perfect with it. The brown accessories include an adorable gob hat, brown gloves, brown suede shoes, and a brown woolly swagger coat.

SIMPLICITY WITH DISTINCTIVE LINES

The utility coat sketched at the left, one of the smartest models of the season. Fashioned of rust-colored basket-weave woolen, the sleeves are set in with a deep dolman line, and decorated with rows of stitching at elbow and wrist. The collar, too, is treated with rows of stitching and may be worn open to form deep revers. A belt of self-material and a matching hat, simply trimmed with a band of brown grosgrain ribbon, complete the costume.

Mercolized Wax
Keeps Skin Young

Absorb blemishes and discolorations by regularly using Mercolized Wax. Get an ounce, and use as directed. Invisible particles of aged skin are freed and all defects such as pimples, liver spots, tan, freckles and large pores disappear. Skin is then beautifully clear, soft and velvety, and looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty. At all Drug Stores.

Powdered Saxolite
Reduces wrinkles and other age-signs. Simply dissolve one ounce Saxolite in half-pint witch hazel and use daily as face lotion.

A FIGHT TO THE DEATH!—One of the big thrills in the picture, "Bring 'Em Back Alive," is the struggle between a python and a tiger. The picture is at the Fox.

WHAT DO YOU MEAN, SKEEZIX — A REAL TRYOUT FOR OUR SEVEN-LEAGUE SHOES.

COME ON, WE'RE GOIN' TO STEP OUT ACROSS CANADA, UNCLE WALT.

SO WE START AT QUEBEC, DO WE?

SURE. THERE ARE THE PLAINS OF ABRAHAM WHERE WOLFE AND MONTCALM FOUGHT THEIR BATTLE.

THAT'S MOUNT ROYAL AN' THE CITY IS MONTREAL.

YES, STEAMSHIPS FOR EUROPE SAIL FROM HERE AND GO 1000 MILES BEFORE TOUCHING THE OCEAN.

THOSE ARE OTTAWA'S HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

YES, YOU'LL BE COLLECTING THEM UP HERE IN CANADA INSTEAD OF CAPITOLS.

NOW WE'RE GOIN' OVER TORONTO. WE MAKE A LONG HOP NORTHWEST FROM HERE.

IT DOESN'T SEEM THAT WAY BUT IF WE WENT STRAIGHT WEST WE'D GO RIGHT THROUGH MICHIGAN AND WISCONSIN.

A THOUSAND MILES OVER WILD COUNTRY TO WINNIPEG. I'M GLAD WE DIDN'T HAVE TO MAKE A FORCED LANDING.

PERHAPS WE'D BETTER LAND FOR A SHOESTRING INSPECTION.

OVER MILES AND MILES OF WHEAT IN THE REGINA AND SASKATOON COUNTRY.

IT SEEMS AS IF WE'D SEEN ENOUGH WHEAT AN' TIMBER TO LAST EVERYBODY FOREVER.

THIS IS WHAT I WAS LOOKING FOR BETWEEN SASKATOON AND EDMONTON — THE GREAT BUFFALO RESERVE.

GEE THEY HAVE THOUSANDS OF 'EM DON'T THEY?

NOW WE'VE GOT TO SEE IF OUR SHOES ARE GOOD FOR ALTITUDE TOO.

WE'VE GOT SOME REAL CANADIAN ROCKIES TO GO OVER — MOUNT KING GEORGE FOR INSTANCE.

WE JUST COULDN'T MISS LAKE LOUISE.

WE DESERVE TO LIGHT A FEW MINUTES HERE AT ALERT BAY ON VANCOUVER ISLAND.

I'LL BET TOTUM POLES ARE WHAT THE INDIANS HAD FOR COMIC STRIPS.

I CLAIM THAT'S A RECORD SKEEZIX. ACROSS CANADA IN 20 MINUTES!

IT WON'T STAND LONG UNCLE WALT. I BETCHA WE CAN CUT FIVE MINUTES OFF THE RETURN TRIP.

THAT PHONEY NICKEL

IT MAKES ME AS MAD TO BE STUNG FOR A NICKEL AS FOR FIVE BUCKS — MAYBE Madder.

HELLO, MAMMA. WHAT'S NEW?

NOTHING JUST WORK.

I GOT A PHONEY NICKEL SLIPPED OVER ON ME TODAY.

THAT'S GOOD — I MUST HAVE SPENT IT.

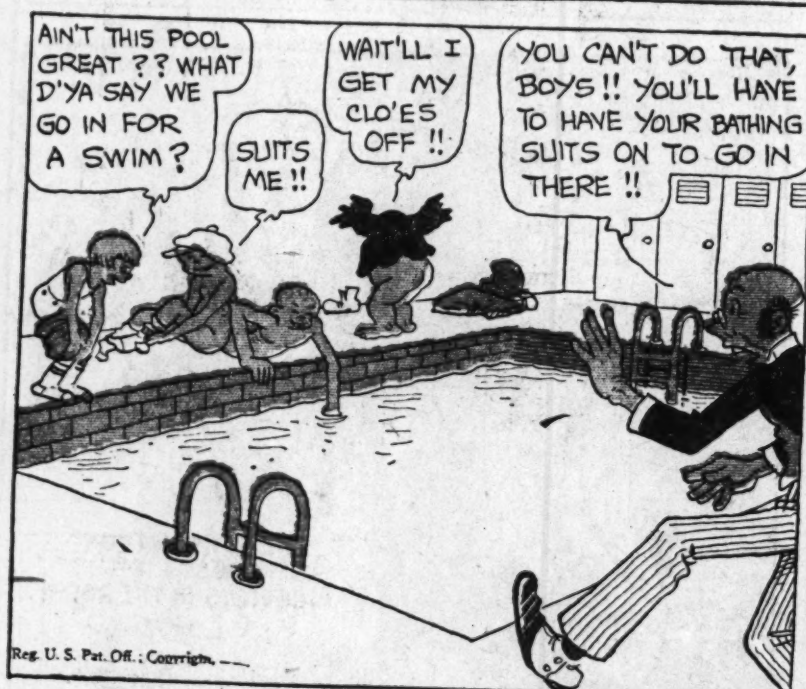

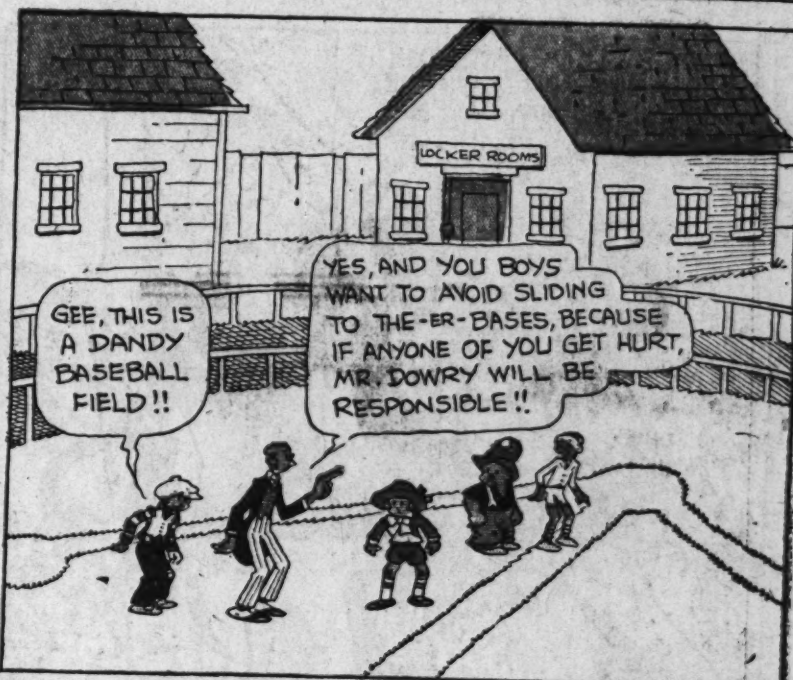

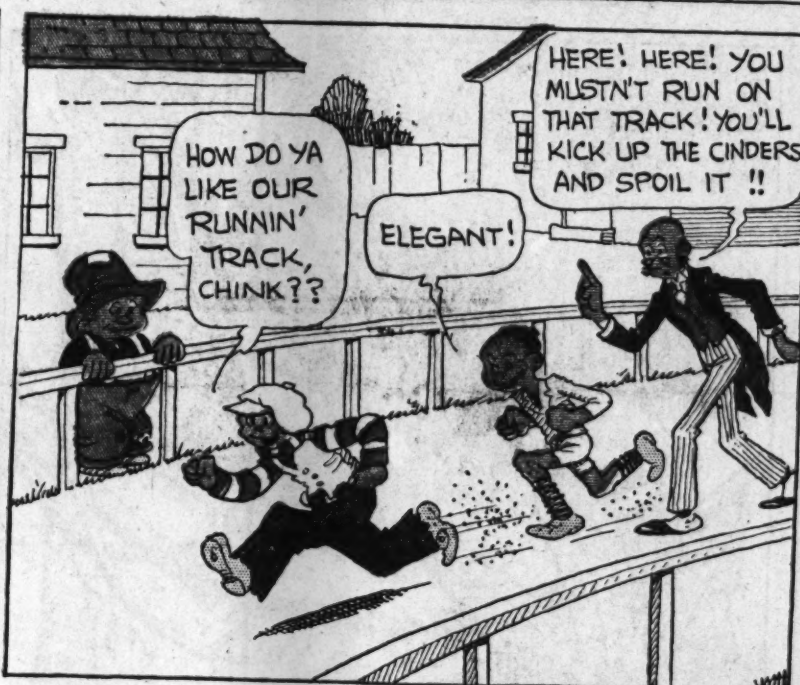

THIS WEEK'S STAMP INDICATES SKEEZIX GOING SOMEWHERE IN HIS SEVEN-LEAGUE SHOES. A LEAGUE BEING THREE MILES FIGURE IT UP.

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Copyright, 1932.

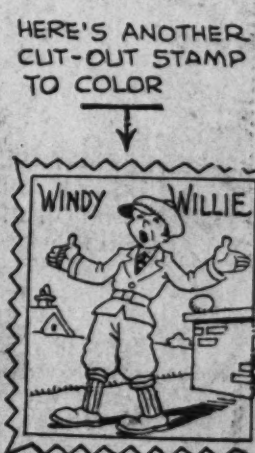

--AND BECAUSE MY CAR RAN YOU OVER AND TO KEEP YOU BOYS OFF THE STREETS, I'M GIVING YOU BOYS ONE OF MY LOTS, WHICH I'VE HAD FIXED AS A PLAYGROUND WITH A CLUBHOUSE !! YOU'LL FIND MY SECRETARY DOWN THERE TO SHOW YOU AROUND, AND I'LL BE OVER LATER TO SEE HOW YOU'RE MAKING OUT !!

G-GOSH!!
DO YOU REALLY MEAN THAT??
THANKS!!
